BIG AUSTRIAN FORT OFFERS TO GIVE UP

FIGHT OVER CAR AUDITS BREAKS OUT

Engineering Board Assails Legal Opinions of the Mayor's Aid.

"CITY NOT CHEATED."

The offensive movement being prepared by the city administration against the board of supervising engineers was assailed suddenly yesterday.

Instead of waiting and taking a defensive attitude upon the completion of the audit of the street car companies' books, the board made public an opinion attacking the legal advice upon which the administration's case is being built.

That opinion was prepared by Walter L. Fisher, one of the authors of the 1907 traction ordinances and special traction counsel for the city during the first four years they were in operation.

Mr. Fisher assailed the entire legal groundwork built up by Corporation Counsel Beckwith, who gave a series of opinions in which were opposed various constructions placed by the supervising board upon the provisions of the traction ordinances relative to the "partnership" accounts between the city and the companies.

Beckwith Reversed Self?

In effect Mr. Fisher alleges Mr. Beckwith, in order to support charges that the board's rulings had done the city a vast financial injury, completely reversed himself on the most important point at issue.

Mr. Fisher alleged that, in an opinion given while the unification ordinance was pending, and before the present controversy arose, Mr. Beckwith had held formally that a specified section of that ordinance would approve and indorse the bookkeeping methods sanctioned by the board. After the controversy reached its height, he continued, Mr. Beckwith gave an exactly contradictory opinion.

Answers Law Opinions.

Mr. Fisher then answered two opinions of the city law department on specific questions concerning the method of charging certain expense. The law department had told the accountants the cost of moving downtown elevated columns to permit the passage of the large cars was not a construction matter to be charged against capital account, on which the companies receive an interest allowance. Mr. Beckwith would charge this to operating expense to be borne by the companies. Mr. Fisher said it was as much of a construction charge as the cost of relocating tracks.

The city law department held that expenditures for pavements between rails were no more necessary for street car companies than for steam railroads. Mr. Fisher replied that the corporation counsel apparently had overlooked several provisions of the 1907 ordinances relative to this subject.

Fisher Detects Animus.

Mr. Fisher intimated he could detect an animus and an intent to overrule the supervising board wherever an opportunity offered. A similar hint was conveyed by Bion J. Arnold, chairman of the board, in a brief interview.

"The purpose," he said, "of the law department's opinions seems to be to attempt to construe the 1907 ordinances and the unification ordinance so as to show that large amounts of expenditures have been charged to capital which should have been charged to operation.

"An examination of these opinions would seem to show that on every point raised the corporation counsel, or his assistant, has decided or endeavored to decide the question adversely to the rulings of the board."

Second Chapter of Battle.

The present battle is the second chapter in the hostility of the administration toward the board. Each year since the 1907 ordinances were passed the city controller has had an independent audit made of the traction companies' books. Last spring the report on the Chicago City railway company was made by Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. In some manner—never completely explained—a supplemental report was ordered.

This supplemental report was turned over to the law department, and Mr. Beckwith, then first assistant corporation counsel, prepared an opinion for Mayor Harrison charging that improper accounting sanctioned by the board had cost the city something like $2,000,000. The entire matter went to the local transportation committee. Long hearings were held and Attorney Fisher answered

Twenty-six Dead, Three Ships Sunk, Lake Storm Toll

Twelve Bodies Found in Wreckage Washed on Superior Shore.

NEW GALE BLOWING

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—There now remains no doubt that the steamer Curtis and its two tow barges, the Annie M. Peterson and the S. E. Marvin, carrying crews totaling twenty-six men, were lost in the season's most severe storm on Lake Superior Thursday.

The down bound steamer Flagg reports going through heavy wreckage and lumber between Crisp Point and Whitefish Point. Four more bodies, making a total of twelve, among which was that of Capt. J. P. Jennings of the steamer Curtis, were picked up today by life savers in their search. A licensed embalmer has been sent from the Soo to assist in caring for the bodies, which will be shipped from Seney, Mich., as fast as they can be identified.

Lost in Rescue Effort.

Thursday night about 8:30 the Curtis, with the Marvin in tow, entered Munising harbor for shelter. It whistled for the second tow, the Peterson, to shorten line, but got no response. It is believed the Curtis then returned to the lake to look for the lost tow and that the three were wrecked in the storm, as neither boat was seen afloat again.

That some of the crew reached shore alive and were overcome by exhaustion and exposure before they could find shelter is indicated by the fact that one of the bodies was found within one mile of Grand Marais, some distance from any wreckage.

The identified dead are Capt. J. J. Jennings, steamer Curtis; Glen Campbell, Henry Kirchner, born in Detroit; Edward Anderson, born in Norway.

New Storm Is Brewing.

A northwest gale has set in again tonight. The steamer J. J. H. Brown is aground in Mud Lake. Over a thousand tons of its coal cargo will have to be lightered. Inquiries are being made for the steamers Nipigeon and Niko, both long overdue at the Soo. The Nipigeon left Duluth Monday with a cargo of grain and no word has been received from it.

ATTACK UPON THIRD WOMAN STIRS AURORA

Thousands Gather When Mrs. Thompson Tells of Being Choked.

POLICE HAVE A CLEW.

[By a Staff Correspondent.]

Aurora, Ill., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—For several minutes a crowd of several thousand excited citizens who swarmed in front of Magnan & Osborne's shoe store, at 7 Broadway, tonight believed the murderer of Miss Jennie Miller had returned to add another crime to his list.

A few moments before, Miss Annie Carroll, whose mother, Mrs. Martha Thompson, conducts a rooming house on the third floor above the shoe store, fled into Broadway screaming:

"My mother has been murdered!"

Threats of "Lynch Him."

In an instant the cry spread and the citizens, already at a fever heat over the Miller murder mystery, poured out into the street with threats of "Lynch him!"

The nearest policeman immediately notified police headquarters and Chief of Police Michels, Chief of Detectives Otto Wirz, and Night Chief Fred Grass sped to the scene in automobiles with a number of detectives. They heard groans in a room on the third floor and broke down the door.

They found Mrs. Thompson unconscious on the floor. She was revived in a few moments, but it was some time before she could tell a connected story. She is 68 years old.

Woman Tells Story.

"I was sitting here reading when a man raised the window and climbed in from the roof," she said. "He seized me from behind, and, not knowing what he wanted, I picked up the piano stool, and tried to strike him with it. He grabbed my black velvet bag—it had only a dollar in it—and then jumped back out of the window.

"He was a stockily built man and wore a brown suit. I was too excited to notice him closely. He grabbed me by the throat when he was tussling with me and then I fainted.

"I guess I was more frightened than hurt."

Finger Marks on Throat.

There were several finger marks on Mrs. Thompson's throat. Mrs. Carroll, the daughter, said she had gone to a picture show with a friend and found the door locked when she returned. The two went around to the back and up on the third floor rear porch, where they peered through a window and saw Mrs. Thompson lying on the floor. They could hear her groaning, they said.

The description of the man given by Mrs. Thompson tallies somewhat with that of the man seen by Mrs. E. W. Scott lurking near the Free Methodist church, where Miss Miller was slain, and the police believe that if they find Mrs. Thompson's assailant they will have the slayer of Miss Miller.

Trace Clew to "Happy Jack."

The police believe from the description they recognize a character known as "Happy Jack," a habitue of the White Fox saloon at 113 Main street, the "Hinky Dink" haven of the town, where between 400 and 500 bums and hobos gather on winter evenings.

Mrs. Thompson rented a room last Wednesday to the porter of the saloon and he brought two of the men to sleep in his room. Others in the place objected and Mrs. Thompson ordered them out, she said. At first Mrs. Thompson said one of the men had returned and was sleeping in the room again tonight, but later she said none of them had been back since she ordered them out.

Police Differ on Story.

Chief of Detectives Wirz, after questioning the woman more closely, expressed the opinion that she may have been suffering from an epileptic fit to which she had been subjected and that, keyed up to a high tension of fear through reading of the Miller murder, had imagined she had been assaulted.

Other policemen differed and a dead line around that section of the town was established while detectives went on a hunt for the fugitive. It was possible, the police found, that the man escaped down a fire escape on the adjoining building to the Thompson home, the roof of which is on a level with the third floor.

Earlier in the day Coroner Eugene Norton reached the decision that the motive of the Miller murder was not robbery.

As he opened the inquest into Miss Jennie's death, officially supplanting Chief

Mrs. G. H. Britton May Be Head of School Board

She Resigns as Chief of Juvenile Protective Association.

NOW OUT OF TOWN

Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton has tendered her resignation as superintendent of the Juvenile Protective association "in order to devote more time to public affairs." Her resignation was a surprise to the directors of the association. It will take effect about Jan. 1, shortly after Peter Reinberg relinquishes his place as president of the board of education.

Friends of Mrs. Britton are unable to account for her withdrawal, except on the theory that she has been urged by Mayor Harrison for the presidency of the school board. Some are confident she is slated for the position. It is conceded the mayor has sufficient influence to insure the election of Mrs. Britton.

Women to Vote for Mayor.

Women will vote for mayor for the first time next spring and Mr. Harrison's candidacy is regarded as practically certain. Mrs. Britton is known to be an ardent supporter of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, whose popularity was demonstrated when an attempt was made to oust her from office. Mayor Harrison appointed Mrs. Britton to the school board in July of last year.

Mrs. Britton was reached on the long distance telephone at Lakeside, Mich., last night. She was asked about her resignation.

"I wanted to give more time to public affairs," said Mrs. Britton. "I wish to devote more attention to the school board and court work. I am particularly interested in educational matters."

"It is said you are to be the next president of the school board," continued the reporter.

"I should be very much honored, but I don't know anything about that," was the reply. "My reasons for resigning are just what I have told you. I need more time for public things. There has been absolutely no friction or trouble of any kind."

Two Other Candidates.

The vacancy in the school board presidency occasioned by the election of Peter Reinberg as head of the county board brought out two rival candidates, Robert J. Roulston and Michael J. Collins. Mayor Harrison indicated he favored the election of Mr. Collins.

More recently the supporters of Mr. Roulston have asserted the mayor has indicated he will not take a hand in the election. The plans as to the election have been changed. Mr. Reinberg intended to resign on Wednesday. At night he said he would not resign until after the election of the superintendent, which takes place Dec. 9. It is said the uncertainty of the election of Mr. Collins has caused the change in plans.

No Enemies of Mrs. Britton.

The friends of Mrs. Britton assert she will make an excellent candidate for the presidency, as she has no enemies on the board, because she is favorable to Mrs. Young and because of her work in behalf of public school children.

Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, president of the Juvenile Protective association, said Mrs. Britton's resignation would be presented to the board of directors tomorrow afternoon.

"I was much surprised to learn that Mrs. Britton was going to withdraw," said Mrs. Bowen. "I had no idea she was thinking of doing so till I received her letter of resignation a few days ago."

Mayor Harrison was not in the city during the day. He left Friday night on a quail hunting expedition.

THREE NATIONS WARN ON MEXICO

Britain, Spain, and Cuba Say Subjects Fear Evacuation of Vera Cruz.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Great Britain, Spain, and Cuba have notified this government that their citizens in Mexico are panic stricken with the fear that they may lose their lives and property after the American troops leave Vera Cruz.

The statements by the foreign representatives, however, have not altered the president's determination to evacuate Vera Cruz on Monday.

It is understood that the representatives of these governments have been advised that the state department has assurances that Villa will protect the property of all foreigners and that Mexico City will be far safer in his control than it has been at any time since Diaz went into exile.

Capital to Be Evacuated.

Evacuation of Mexico City by Carranza troops will be completed tomorrow noon, according to official dispatches today to the state department. Gens. Obregon and Blanco, in command there, have assured the Brazilian minister and American Consul Silliman that a small force will be left to preserve order.

The Carranza forces are moving eastward to Orizaba, Carranza's temporary capital.

It is possible that the withdrawal of the Carranza forces is a strategic maneuver and that Gen. Obregon will begin an enveloping movement, aiming to cut Villa's communications with the northern states, while the forces under Gen. Jesus Carranza and other generals loyal to the first chief attempt to strike his columns, with Orizaba as a base.

Terror Reigns in Capital.

Vera Cruz, Nov. 21.—The last fugitives to reach here before all traffic on railroads out of Mexico City was suspended today told of a reign of terror in the capital. Thousands are fleeing by every possible vehicle. Only a few Constitutionalist troops guard the city and there is the constant menace of pillage by Zapata.

Gen. Obregon's main army has left the city. Ostensibly it went to battle with the advancing army of Gen. Villa, but it is believed here that instead the Constitutionalist commander withdrew his forces either to the east or west of the capital, effecting a junction with other Carranza troops.

Carranza Men Intrench.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 21.—Information which has reached Gen. Villa's headquarters at Irapuato is that the main army of Gen. Carranza is intrenched at Tula, a short distance north of Mexico City, and there intends to resist the movement of Villa's army to occupy Mexico City. The army, as big as that of Villa, is in strong position. It is commanded by Gen. Pablo Gonzales.

Previous to the receipt of this information it was believed Gen. Villa might progress swiftly enough to occupy the capital tomorrow.

Knowledge of the resistance to be offered, however, probably will upset Villa's plans. The general advance begun from Irapuato through Queretaro, which is held by Villa, is being made cautiously.

Moves Against Tula.

Gen. Felipe Angeles has undertaken the advance against Tula and has a large artillery division. With an advance guard of artillery, although unusual in warfare, Villa expects that he will be able to shell the defenders from Tula. He believes his cavalry, which composes the greater part of his army, will be able to follow up this advantage.

AUDACIOUS SUNK BY A SUBMARINE

Washington Hears from Reliable Source How German Sent Craft to Bottom.

New York, Nov. 21.—[Special.]—The British superdreadnought Audacious was sunk by a torpedo discharged from a German submarine. This news was received at Washington today from an authoritative source in Berlin and the details given fit closely with the reports that came from eyewitnesses who saw the disaster from the steamship Olympic.

The Audacious was hit twice, and the second torpedo caused its magazines to explode. This story refutes the suggestion that the battleship was blown up by its own crew "to prevent it becoming a menace to navigation," as was stated after the disaster.

Learn of Fleet's Base.

Last month the Germans through their system of espionage learned that the British battleship fleet was making its base at Lough Swilly, a harbor on the northwest coast of Ireland.

When this information was learned by the German authorities a small squadron of submarines was sent out to try and catch one or more of the British battleships. The submarines left Wilhelmshaven, and, carefully dodging the mines, worked their way north and then skirted the coast of Scotland, and on Oct. 26 had discovered the base at Lough Swilly.

Big Sea Running.

Early on the morning of Oct. 27 it was blowing a gale and a big sea was running. In a measure this was favorable to the submarine.

The scene when the tiny vessel of destruction arrived was one to gladden the heart of any commander of such a vessel. Spread out before him was the big British fleet. The submarine took one look and then submerged. Again, a little later, it came to the surface, and was then only a short distance from the Audacious and within striking distance.

Torpedo Strikes Astern.

Just how many torpedoes were fired from the submarine is not known, but one caught the Audacious astern.

The submarine cleared out altogether and tried to make its way home. Whether it reached its parent ship, which is supposed to be the Berlin, formerly one of the transatlantic passenger steamers, has not yet been reported. The Berlin, however, has reached Trondhjem, a town on the coast of Norway, and it is said it has been interned there.

RUSSIA HALTS GERMAN DRIVE INTO POLAND

LOSSES ENORMOUS.

A large map, showing the positions of the opposing armies for the last ten weeks, accompanied by an article explaining the country along the German, Russian, and Austrian frontiers, where a great battle is now being fought, will be found on page 1 of part 8 of this paper. The article and map were furnished by Prof. Lawrence Martin of the University of Wisconsin, who is a geographical authority.

BULLETIN.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—A Rome dispatch to the Daily Mail tonight declares that the commander of the fortress of Przemysl, besieged by the Russians, offered to capitulate upon condition that the garrison be permitted to march out with arms and equipment. The Russians refused.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 21.—Enormous losses were inflicted upon the Austro-German forces which advanced eastward between Kielce and Radom, and at all other points Russian lines have successfully repulsed efforts of the enemy to press forward in the movement upon Warsaw, it was stated here tonight.

It is believed here that in administering the defeat on the Kielce-Radom line the Russian forces have smothered what was developing into a movement upon Ivangorod, the fortress on the Vistula to the south of Warsaw.

The Russians are now strongly intrenched along the railroad line between Lowicz and Skierniewice. The attack in this section is being made by the first line of the German army in great force.

Russians Seek to Crush Foe.

At Lodz a battle of great magnitude is still in progress. This engagement merges into that which is being waged south from Lowicz. A determined effort is being made by the forces of the czar to throw back the German army which advanced from Kalisz and flank the main army commanded by Gen. von Hindenberg which is hammering at the Lowicz-Skierniewice line.

The German line is in the form of a wedge, the apex, fifty miles from Warsaw, being between Lowicz and Skierniewice. The line then runs back to the northwest toward Plock and to the southwest through Lodz. It is in a desperate effort to prevent the widening of this front and to throw the right wing of the wedge back upon the center that the Russians are making their fight at Lodz.

The Army Messenger, the official organ of the general staff of the Russian army, summing up recent operations in the eastern arena of hostilities, publishes the following:

"The Germans are making fresh efforts to penetrate our front between Lowicz and Skiernievice with the object of marching on Warsaw. It seems that the enemy threw important forces in this direction.

"The effort of the Germans to march to Warsaw by penetrating our front between Kielce and Radom resulted in total failure, and our troops forced the enemy to retire along all this front.

Report Heavy German Losses.

"As always in its retreats, the German army lost enormous numbers in dead, wounded, and prisoners, as well as provision trains, artillery, and war material.

"On Nov. 18 important Austro-German forces, supporting themselves on the fortified country between Czenstochowa and Cracow, undertook an energetic offensive movement against our troops. Repulsed on all this front with heavy losses, the enemy endeavored a fresh offensive movement, but again our forces, by a counter attack, drove them back with losses as heavy as those which attended the first repulse. We took a large number of prisoners.

"There is furious fighting in the region of Cracow, the Germans realizing that this position, with its strong fortifications, is their last protected position on this front."

This is the first mention that has been made of the Kielce-Radom line during the present campaign, and previous dispatches have given no hint that the Germans and Austrians had penetrated Poland to that extent. Kielce and Radom lie south of the line on which the main operations have been directed. An advance upon this line would apparently indicate that the Germans are striking at Ivangorod, the fortress south of Warsaw, as well as the Polish capital itself.

Germans Ride Into Trap.

The losses to both the Russian and German forces in the present fighting in Poland are heavier than during the engagements of the first campaign. Details received here of the fighting along the banks of the River Bzura, upon which the Russians retired, bring frightful stories of a trap into which the German cavalry rode.

The Russians, withdrawing along the Bzura, mined the banks. The Germans pressed forward in hot pursuit, seeking a crossing. When a heavy detachment had reached the river the mines were exploded. The destruction was terrible. Wounded riders and their mangled mounts were thrown into the river. The horses of survivors bolted and leaped into the water.

The bed of the river had been filled with barbed wire, and men and mounts became entangled in a hopeless struggling mass. The survivors of the explosions along the bank who were not drowned were kicked or crushed to death by the struggling horses. The Russians also opened fire on the tangle of men and horses and few escaped. Those were immediately made prisoners.

East Prussia Strongly Fortified.

The advance of the Russians into the Mazurian lakes region of eastern Prussia, near Johannisburg and Arys, has revealed the extent of the preparations made by the Germans to resist invasion. The whole region is described as a gigantic fortress, facing to the east and south in the form of a huge semi-circle, ninety miles in extent.

The spaces between the lakes, which range from marshy ponds by the hundreds to bodies of water ten miles long, are intrenched with wire fences. At intervals there are earthen redoubts, which are reinforced with stone work and protected by mine fields. Wherever it is practicable canals have been dug. Behind these canals lie German trenches.

At Arys, where the Russians are reported to have made a considerable advance in the last few days, they have been compelled to storm concrete blockhouses, resulting in some instances in heavy loss of life.

Berlin Confident of Outcome.

BERLIN, Nov. 21.—The meager news received from Russian Poland, given out in official circles here today, indicates that the Germans and the Russians have joined in battle along the whole front between the Warta and the Vistula rivers, while the Russians to the north of the Vistula are reported to be falling back.

An official communication given out by the German general army headquarters today says:

"In the eastern war theater the operations are still further developing. Nothing can yet be reported regarding the situation in East Prussia.

Russians Reported Retreating.

"The pursuit of the defeated enemy, who was driven back through Miawa and Plock, continues. Our offensive at Lodz has made progress.

"There are great expectations regarding the decision in the fighting near Lodz. It is generally taken for granted that the gigantic Russian army, despite its enormous numerical superiority, is heavily threatened by Gen. von Hindenberg's ingenious strategy and bold offensive spirit.

"Retreat has been made difficult by the destruction by the Germans of all railroads, bridges, and highways. A Russian defeat may decide the whole campaign in the east, as on the Russian side there are no trained reserves and a lack of arms, ammunition, and officers.

"In the region to the east of Czenstochowa our troops are fighting by the side of our allies and have gained ground."

Germans Establishing Lines.

In order to insure a complete clearance of German territory of Russians for the winter a line of communication has been established which, it is declared, will enable the Germans to hold whatever Russian territory they may gain, even to Warsaw, should Gen. von Hindenberg take that city.

No uneasiness is felt over the East Prusian campaign. With the defeat of the Russians along the line to Warsaw the invaders to the north will be forced to retire, it is declared. Favorable progress is reported along the Czenstochowa-Cracow front.

The reoccupation of Tarnow, Galicia, by the Austrians is regarded here as a movement which will prevent the envelopment of Cracow by the Russians advancing from the east.

GERMAN WELFARE UNION INITIATES PEACE TALK.

Circulars Sent to Holland Urge All Neutral Nations to Prepare Way for Mediation Overtures.

THE HAGUE, Holland, Nov. 21.—The German sections of the peace societies are sending circulars to their representatives in Holland and other neutral states to initiate a peace movement.

The International Wohlfahrt verein [Welfare union] of Berlin has made a direct appeal to influential Dutch newspapers by means of a printed circular inclosed in an open envelope, expressing the wish that all neutral countries and lovers of peace work together and prepare the way for mediation overtures to be made by some neutral power, as, for instance, the United States.

It is considered remarkable that the circular should have reached its destination. If its contents had been displeasing to the German censor it never would have passed the frontier.

FREEZING IN WAR'S ZONE.

Cold Weather Comes to Belgium, France and in the Vosges Mountains.

PARIS, Nov. 21.—Freezing weather has set in throughout the length of the battle zone in France and Belgium, the temperature today varying between 25 and 28 degrees above zero Fahrenheit.

Snow is falling in northern France and in the Vosges mountains and also at Marseilles.

The French soldier wears a woolen band, provided by the government, which he wraps four or five times around his body. He also often wears four or five shirts, adding an extra one from time to time as the temperature falls.

CANADA WILL ARM 91,000.

Plans to Mobilize 50,000 and Send Them Forward as Requisitioned by War Office.

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 21.—Canada will increase immediately to 91,000 the number of men under arms, Premier Borden announced tonight. Fifty thousand are to be mobilized and sent forward as requisitioned by the war office.

SMYRNA AFFAIR A FRIENDLY ACT, PORTE EXPLAINS

Merely Warned Tennessee Harbor Was Mined, Morgenthau Wires.

Washington D. C., Nov. 21.—Turkey has voluntarily explained to the United States government through Ambassador Morgenthau that the shots fired toward the launch of the American cruiser Tennessee last Monday were intended merely as the customary warning that the port of Smyrna was mined and closed to navigation.

Although the explanation is informal and the United States government still is awaiting a reply to formal representations which Ambassador Morgenthau was instructed to make to the Turkish foreign office, it was generally admitted at the White House, the state and navy departments that all danger of serious complications over the incident had been removed.

Explained Affair Fully.

Ambassador Morgenthau reported that two members of the Ottoman cabinet, the ministers of interior and war, had fully explained the occurrence to him, and high officials here said his message was filed before the instructions sent from Washington to discuss the subject officially with the grand vizier could have been received by Mr. Morgenthau.

President Wilson and his cabinet regard the informal explanation as a certain precursor of a satisfactory formal explanation, and that guarantees for the protection of Americans and their interests will also be forthcoming from the Turkish government.

The message from Mr. Morgenthau, dated Nov. 16 but delayed en route, relieved a delicate situation. It arrived late in the afternoon, and after being deciphered was discussed at a conference tonight between the president, Secretary Daniels, and Acting Secretary Lansing of the state department.

White House States Case.

After the conference the following statement was issued at the White House:

"Dispatches concerning the Smyrna incident have just been received from Ambassador Morgenthau, which were sent before he had received any communication from the state department. He informs the government that on the evening of the day on which the incident occurred (on Monday last) the Ottoman minister of the interior informed him that the commander of the Tennessee had attempted to visit Smyrna in his seam launch, passing through the mine zone, contrary to the Turkish government's regulations, and that the boat had been stopped by warning shots fired toward it.

"He added that the governor general, after the incident, had offered to take the officer overland in his automobile. The minister of war later communicated with the ambassador, fully informing him of the incident and requesting that the Tennessee, which was then at Vourlah, some distance from the harbor of Smyrna, should be withdrawn.

Was Told Port Was Closed.

"The embassy had some time ago been officially informed that the port of Smyrna was closed alike to warships and merchant vessels. The ambassador therefore requested Capt. Decker to withdraw and he, of course, did so, proceeding to the Island of Chios.

"Owing to the extreme difficulty of communicating with Constantinople no further advices have been received. Instructions had already been sent to the ambassador. We are still awaiting the ambassador's reply to those instructions."

The fact that the governor general of Smyrna had offered to take Capt. Decker of the Tennessee by automobile to the American consulate at Smyrna, officials here declared, indicated clearly the friendliness of the Turkish officials.

Turkey Within Rights.

The right of a belligerent to mine its ports and exclude neutral merchantmen, as well as warships, is recognized in international law, and the only ground on which the subject probably will be further discussed will be to elicit from the Ottoman government some definite guarantees respecting the safety of Americans and their interests, so that it will not be necessary for American warships to visit Turkish ports.

Secretary Daniels announced today that his order to the commanders of the Tennessee and North Carolina, suspending the navy regulations which ordinarily give them wide discretion, would be in effect only until the present incident was explained. Tomorrow he will rescind that order and give the captains of the two American warships the same latitude they had previously enjoyed. The vessels may not remain in Turkish territorial waters, but will stay within a half day's cruise in some of the islands now belonging to Greece.

Washington Puzzled Awhile.

Official Washington was puzzled for a time today when it became known at the navy department that Capt. Decker had first described the firing as "an act not hostile, but unfriendly." This cryptic phrase had been omitted, Secretary Daniels said, from Capt. Decker's original report as made public because the message was garbled and attempts were made to discover whether or not it should have read "not hostile, but friendly." When the cable companies verified the word as "unfriendly," Secretary Daniels came to the conclusion that Capt. Decker had merely expressed a personal opinion

Mobilization in Turkey is not proceeding as rapidly as it did in the countries of Europe. The primitive method of water travel shown in the picture has been in use since the time of the ancient Babylonians. With all the men going to war the women are called to take their places in those circular ferry boats, called kufas. The squad of soldiers are a part of the sultan's forces in Mesopotamia.

MISSING AFTER ARREST AS SPY

Mystery Surrounds Fate of Son of Illustrator A. B. Frost.

FRIEND IS RELEASED.

[By Cable to Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Nov. 21.—The whereabouts of Arthur B. Frost Jr., son of A. B. Frost, the American illustrator, who was arrested at Belle Isle on Nov. 13 as a spy, is a mystery.

Mr. Frost and his friend, P. G. Bruce, an American painter of Richmond, Va., had been spending the summer at Belle Isle, according to their habit for several years past and were well known all over the island. Both were arrested when they visited a concentration camp for German prisoners on the island, but Mr. Bruce was released later.

He telegraphed to friends in Paris about the plight of Mr. Frost and the American embassy was notified. The embassy telephoned to the ministry of foreign affairs at Bordeaux and it was expected that Mr. Frost would be released.

Released; Then Taken Back.

On Nov. 17 Mr. Frost telegraphed to friends in Paris that he had been released from Lorient military prison on provisional liberty and that he would return to Belle Isle on Friday.

Just what happened since is not definitely known, but a dispatch from Belle Isle says Mr. Frost was sent back to Lorient. On Saturday he was taken from the gendarmerie to the quay between two gendarmes to take the boat for Lorient. Bruce was not allowed to go along.

The American embassy has received no satisfaction from Bordeaux. A police official called at the embassy yesterday to verify the details in regard to Mr. Frost's passports. Secretary Bliss of the embassy told the police agent that he would assume responsibility for Frost's good behavior in France after his release.

Natives Were Suspicious.

Mr. Frost and Mr. Bruce, since the outbreak of the war and previous to their arrest, had been constantly annoyed and subjected to suspicion on the part of the natives of Belle Isle. It now appears that the commander had heard stories from the natives about the actions of the two men which made him think that their visit to the wharf to see the prisoners arrive was not due to curiosity alone.

The latest from Belle Isle is that the military governor refuses to disclose the charge against Frost. One of the gendarmes told Bruce that the charge against Frost is insulting an officer, and not espionage.

Accused as Spy in London.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The intense public interest in the case of Carl Hans Lody, the German spy, recently executed in the Tower of London, is being paralleled in less degree by the attention given the trial of the man who claims to be Bridgman Taylor.

In the Bow street police court today the prisoner, who has an American passport in the name of Bridgman Taylor, but who Scotland Yards insists is Horst von der Goltz, was remanded for a further hearing. It is intimated that the next hearing will be before another court, presumably a court martial.

The only charge against the prisoner is that he has not registered as an alien. It is alleged, however, that the circumstances of the case in some particulars are similar to those of the Lody trial.

The prisoner arrived in London on Nov. 3, and registered at a hotel as B. H. Taylor of El Paso, Texas. According to the stamps on his passport he had just come from Germany. He is said to have boasted of Germany's great prowess.

SERVIA DENIES REPORTS OF GREAT AUSTRIAN VICTORIES.

Statement Says Troops Retreated from Valjevo to More Advantageous Position—Lost 5 Cannon.

PARIS, Nov. 21.—Telegraphing from Athens, the correspondent of the Havas news agency transmits the following communication as issued at the Servian legation in the Grecian capital:

"Great Austrian victories are denied. The Servian troops retreated from their positions around Valjevo, which they had defended for two months against superior forces. Today they hold more advantageous positions, and they confidently await the attack of the enemy. The evacuation of Valjevo and the retreat were effected without incident or losses. Five cannon had to be abandoned on the heights, as they could not be lowered, and they were rendered useless.

"No important encounters have taken place since the order to retreat was given, consequently great Austrian victories are impossible."

Tokio Paper Says Germans Are Spreading Propaganda Over Empire.

GAINING NO GROUND.

TOKIO, Nov. 21.—An attempt of German agents to arouse feeling against the United States in Japan is alleged by the Japan Times today.

It exposes what it declares to be propaganda permeating Japan, seeking to stir animosity against the American government.

This, it is declared, may be traced to German agents, and the belief is expressed that similar intrigue is planned in California. There, it is declared, the anti-Japanese bills which are expected to be enacted in 1915 are to be used to cause friction between the two nations.

GERMANS COURT FAVOR OF IRISH THROUGH STATEMENT

Assure Sir Roger Casement They Desire Only "National Prosperity and Freedom" for Erin.

BERLIN, via wireless to Sayville, L. I., Nov. 21.—Assurances that Germany desires "only national prosperity and freedom" for Ireland have been given the Irish leader, Sir Roger Casement, an official statement from the foreign office today declares in telling of a visit of the Irish leader here.

"Sir Roger Casement was received at the foreign office," the statement declares, "and pointed out statements which have been published in Ireland, apparently with the authority of the British government behind them, that German victory would inflict great loss upon the Irish people, whose homes, churches, priests, and lands would be at the mercy of an invading army, actuated only by motives of pillage and conquest.

"In reply the acting secretary of state of the foreign office, by order of the imperial chancellor, officially declared that the German government repudiates the

FRANCE CLAIMS IMPORTANT GAIN CLOSE TO VERDUN

Heights of Ornes Captured and Two German Batteries Are Silenced.

BULLETIN.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—French forces have captured the heights of Ornes, near Verdun, and silenced two German batteries, according to official dispatches today to the French embassy.

PARIS, Nov. 21.—In artillery fighting extending along the western and southern battle fronts the allies have gained the advantage, the official statement, issued today, declares.

From Nieuport to the Aisne, and on to the Champagne district the allied fire held the advantage, it is stated, and the Germans were prevented from constructing new trenches.

Two German infantry attacks at Hollenbeke were repulsed, the statement declares.

Trenches Are Near Together.

Of the operations in the Vosges, the statement declares that in some places the French trenches are now within thirty yards of the German positions.

"Our artillery gained the advantage over that of the enemy at Nieuport," the statement declares. "Intermittent cannonading was in progress between Dixmude and to the south of Ypres.

"The enemy was prevented from constructing new trenches in the region of the Aisne and in the Champagne district by our artillery, which gained decided advantage."

British on the Offensive.

There are signs of renewed activity of the British from Arras, however, in the movement which has for its objective the piercing of the German line of communication.

Reports reaching headquarters today indicate that the Germans may be about to try a new plan of driving the allied troops from their trenches in Flanders by the use of huge steel barges of burning oil.

Barges in great numbers have been brought up at the rear, together with great quantities of crude oil. It is believed to be the intention of the Germans to launch these along the Yser canal and in the inundated sections between the Dixmude and the coast.

Many Trains Sent West.

BRUGES, Belgium, Nov. 21.—According to the best information reaching here, the fighting on the Yser front has stopped. The severe cold weather continues, and the old inhabitants fear that there may be a repetition of the notoriously severe winter of 1870-'71.

It is reported that fifty-seven empty trains of forty cars each, capable of carrying 200,000 men, are moving through northern Belgium in the direction of West Flanders. It is assumed here that these trains are for the transportation of additional German regiments to the eastern arena of hostilities.

WEEK'S NEWS FAVORS GERMANS

Kaiser's Move Across Poland Shows Greatest Strategy to Date.

NO CHANGE IN WEST.

BY J. W. T. MASON.

[Former European Manager of the United Press.]

New York, Nov. 21.—The progress of the German movement across Poland toward Warsaw is the most important development of the week. It gives evidence of a power in offensive second only to the original German drive into France.

At the beginning of the week Gen. von Hindenburg's strategy seemed confined to pushing a wedge along that part of the Vistula river which runs due east from the German frontier until it bends to the south at Warsaw.

But at the end of the week it was admitted at Petrograd that in reality another German offensive was in progress. This second movement apparently had crossed Poland unheralded, the first news of its presence being a Russian statement that the Germans had failed to pierce the Slav line between Random and Kielce.

Translated from the confusing language of the maps, this announcement meant that besides moving straight for Warsaw from the west, the Germans were advancing from the south toward Ivangorod, which is a second class fortress protecting Warsaw's southern flank.

Neither of these offensives has been checked by the Russians and Von Hindenburg's genius as a military leader is once more demonstrating itself against odds.

Servia in Dire Straits.

Austria's sweep into Servia has resulted in the victory of Valjevo, which signifies the collapse of the Servian western offensive. Servia during the week has been compelled to ask Petrograd for help. The appeal comes at an inopportune moment, while Russia is planning a campaign against the Turks and at the same time is being driven across Poland by the masterful Von Hindenburg.

Yet Servia's plea is the most pitiful episode of the war, except only the plight of Belgium. It was Austria's attempt to crush Servia that caused Russia's intervention, and now, when the time has come to save Servia from an Austrian invasion the Slavs are distracted by Germany's new offensive and by the temptation to invade Turkey.

The events of the week have thus added greatly to Russia's difficulties and have involved her in a net of conflicting desires.

Little Change in the West.

The campaign in the west has continued its indecisive character throughout the week. In Flanders there has been a slight exchange of territory, but all the central points along the battle line have been impregnable.

Along the eastern French frontier the incident of Chauvoncourt has resulted in a German success won by unusual means. The town, which forms part of the German holdings along the Meuse, was mined, after which the Germans retreated.

The French rushed forward to occupy the stronghold, whereupon the mines were exploded. How large were the French losses is not reported, but the Germans apparently were able to reoccupy the town without difficulty.

This trick is understood to have been performed by the Germans at Muelhausen with frightful effect when the French first invaded Alsace. Its successful repetition suggests at best that the French are not using experienced troops for the Meuse operations.

STERLING MOUNTED SHEFFIELD PLATE
In the Sheffield plate of the eighteenth century, copper and silver plates were rolled together, by a tedious process which to-day would make it more costly than solid silver. Modern Sheffield plate, of which the pattern shown here is a splendid example, has a base of nickel silver, but retains the chief characteristic of the original Sheffield, the sterling silver border mountings giving it a wearing quality which places it beyond the question of "How long will it last?" and upon the same plane of service as sterling silver.

Galician Types in Portion of Austria Invaded by Russians.

GALICIAN PEASANT WOMAN NEAR AUSTRIAN-RUSSIAN BATTLE FIELD—It was the misfortune of this woman to live within the zone of the shell fire in the vicinity of Rawa Ruska. She and her family took refuge in the cellar under the house, which luckily was not struck.

TYPES FROM SOUTH EASTERN GALICIA—This picture was taken in the quaint little village of Halicz, on the Dniester, shortly after the Russian left wing had swept through that district. This town is typical of Galicia and contains many races. The Russians will have a considerable problem in digesting this population, should they remain in possession of the country after the war.

TYPE OF GALICIAN GIRL—With war all around her this little milkmaid seems to be going about her duties as calmly as ever. One of the noticeable characteristics of the people in this part of the world is that they all wrap their heads up very heavily. This girl is no exception to this rule.

LOSES HIS HOME IN GALICIA—This old man said that he had been in three wars, but that nothing had been like this. In his hand he displays bits of the shell that wrecked his home during the bombardment of a village.

NATIVE GALICIAN WOMEN—The weather was obviously not severe when this picture was taken; it will be seen that the women all have their heads heavily bound in woolen shawls. They seem to be chatting pleasantly with the two Russian officers.

A GALICIAN TOO OLD TO BE CALLED TO THE COLORS—This old man is characteristic of the country. Long white flowing beards are worn by all aged men.

NONCOMBATANTS IN FRANCE GIVE MITE TO CHARITY

Each One Sends All He Can to Alleviate Suffering of Soldiers at the Front.

BY CAROLYN WILSON.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TRIBUNE.]

PARIS, Nov. 3.—Under the heading, "A Contagious Disease," one of the daily papers of Paris prints each morning the list of charities, little and big, that have profited the previous day.

They print the letters that come with the parcels of chocolate for the soldiers, with the warm garments for the wounded the appeals for orphan children, and the offers of homes for refugees.

It really gives one courage for a new day just to read these letters and to look over the list of money subscriptions, and to count the quantity of soldiers' equipments which have been sent out the previous day.

Some of the letters are from women who live on an income so modest that it is barely a living and yet they plead for a Belgian family with whom they may divide it. Houses are offered to the homeless and meals to the hungry.

Every One Gives His Mite.

In a thousand different ways each does what he can—each gives what lies in his power. For instance, the barbers of Paris decided to go two days a week to the hospitals and give the men shaves and haircuts free. The chauffeurs' union offered to the government the use of cars and men for forty-eight hours each week for the free transportation of parcels and clothing to the front.

A magnificent gift was made by the Baroness Henri de Rothschild, who has charge of an auxiliary hospital here. It consisted of 600,000 little vials of tincture of iodine for the soldiers to carry with them. It has been brought to the public notice so often that if the soldiers only had something with which they might sterilize their wounds immediately a large proportion of the blood poisoning and infection could be avoided.

Fear of Spies Prevails.

Another contagion, not so productive nor so pleasant as charity, is the fear of spies. It seems to be a constant belief that the city is full of them and that they can work a great deal of harm.

For instance: I was walking down the Rue de Faubourg Montmartre when I saw a café on which was the sign, "The owner of this café is from Puy and the owner's wife from Ardennes. They speak dialect."

Odd and amusing as this sign is, it has a distinct purpose. During these last weeks many merchants speaking a broken or accented French have been arrested as suspects, so that the Frenchman listens for bad French as the sign of a spy. These two innocent souls wished to have no misunderstanding about their sentiments even if their pronunciation was not admissible at the Academie.

All the papers, with the exception of the Guerre Sociale, seem to foster the effort to run down possible suspects and have made life miserable for a great many innocent persons.

Nearly All Are Partisan.

On the morning after an editorial by Gustav Hervé along these lines had appeared in the Guerre Sociale came another on the eighth commandment of Lord Curzon, "Do not scorn the enemy."

"Does it make the victory any more praiseworthy," asks Hervé, "that we have beaten a nation of cowards and poltroons? Does it make our wives and mothers any happier to know or think that French prisoners are being maltreated? Is there any real nobility in detailing exaggerated accounts of cruelty? Is it generous to suppress letters from French soldiers praising German kindness?"

Hervé made fun of the men at the Academy—Frederic Masson in particular, who would like everything German changed. It seems strange that M. Hervé is the only man in Paris who has this point of view. Partisanship and prejudice is carried to such a point that it is really ridiculous and the serious members of the Academy have been doing more "tit-for-tat" answering to German professors than is compatible with the dignity of their calling.

Defends German Aid to World.

Goethe and Kant and Schiller and Beethoven have all been repudiated. Perhaps it makes me more provoked than my more partisan English friends, for I lived two years in Berlin and I can only believe that Germany, up to now, has been the mistress of the civilized world.

I do not mean that I am defending it in this present crisis—far from it. My sympathy is heart and soul with the right—and that is the allies—and I have been amazed to see the point of view taken by so many of the correspondents, who have been, after all, only with the Germans.

But when I say mistress of the civilized world I mean that there is no other nation which has contributed to science, to music, to the theater, to invention, commerce, industry, literature, surgery—all sides—with deeper devotion and thoroughness than Germany. And it is too bad that the world should suddenly forget this and make of all Germans a nation of butchers and torturers.

Shah of Persia Is Neutral.

BORDEAUX, Nov. 21.—The shah of Persia has officially notified the French government that he is firmly resolved to remain neutral in the present conflict.

TRACTION LINES GIVE $2,000 TO RED CROSS FUND

Banks Also Send a Check for $15,000 Pledged When Campaign Started.

Acting on permission granted by Mayor Harrison and the city council, the Chicago surface lines yesterday gave to the Red Cross, for use in the European war field relief work, a check for $2,000. As the city is entitled to part of the income of the lines, it was necessary to get the city's sanction.

"This contribution is made by and charged to the Chicago surface line companies individually, and is made upon the unanimous request and approval of our executive committee," said the letter of President Busby which accompanied the check.

President J. B. Forgan of the First National bank, on behalf of the banks of the city, also sent to Treasurer Orson Smith, at the Merchants' Loan and Trust bank, the $15,000 which the banks pledged at the beginning, on condition that $100,000 was raised.

Christmas Appeal Made.

The American Red Cross has issued an appeal to the whole people of the United States to refrain from giving Christmas presents this year and send the money instead to help in relieving the terrible war conditions. It has issued beautifully decorated cards which it will send to those for whom presents were intended, but the money for which has been diverted to the relief fund. This card will read:

> At the request of ——, who has contributed to the American Red Cross war relief fund, the American Red Cross sends greetings.
> That the season's cheer may be extended to a portion of the untold numbers of men, women and children who are suffering in Europe, and that their misery may be somewhat lessened, the donor has contributed a portion of his Christmas money to the European war relief fund of the American Red Cross.

Any sum from 50 cents up will be accepted.

What Society Has Done.

Sent 171 highly trained Red Cross surgeons and nurses to hospitals in all the warring countries except Belgium, which asked for supplies instead.

One hundred and sixteen tons absorbent cotton.

Forty-three tons nonabsorbent cotton.

Two hundred and seventy miles of yard wide absorbent gauze.

Five and one-half miles of yard wide starched gauze.

Twenty-three tons bandages.

Two and one-half tons chloroform and ether.

Ask Food for Belgians.

The following letter was sent out during the day by the Belgian food relief committee of Chicago to more than 1,200 persons:

"We appeal to you individually.

"The loss of life in this war is appalling.

"But more pathetic is the thought of women and children slowly dying of starvation. No bugles or banners or leaders to inspire them. And yet still more heart breaking is the thought of mothers watching their children starve. This will happen in Belgium unless you and we help—our ambassador cables, 'by the tens of thousands.'

"It is estimated that $5 a month will keep from starvation a woman or a child.

$5 Feeds One Person a Month.

"You are well-to-do and have some luxuries. A little, a very little, will save $5 a month. You are probably doing much already, but please add this.

"Would you not feel more comfortable to know that you are saving from starvation by some little economy on your part a woman or a child through the next six months? By then warm weather will have come and, perhaps, please God, peace.

"If this, our appeal for the innocent and starving women and children of Belgium, moves you, please sign the inclosed postal card, and a reminder, with addressed envelope, will be sent you each month for your contribution.

"We cannot stop this war, but each of us can help to stop this added horror."

Eight Sign Appeal.

The appeal is signed by Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. Joseph M. Cudahy, Arthur T. Aldis, W. J. Chalmers, Everett L. Millard, Martin A. Ryerson, and Howard Elting.

A foot note calls attention to the fact that distribution is to be made under the direction of the American committee, of which the American ambassador to Great Britain is chairman and the American minister to Belgium is vice chairman.

DUNKIRK SHOWS HORRORS OF WAR; MEDLEY OF TALK

Soldiers from All Corners of World Gathered in Little Seacoast City.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

DUNKIRK, France, Nov. 11.—[Correspondence.]—The people of Dunkirk heard the other morning that the German general staff had either annihilation or a siege in store for them as a part of the campaign against Calais. However, the hours lengthened into days without an attack and the people were reassured by the sight of the English fleet, which was sweeping the German positions in the sand dunes behind Nieuport.

On the street where stands the statue of the great French sailor, Jeant Bart, a merciless enemy to England, may now be seen a collection of costumes and uniforms of many colors.

A medley of languages may be heard there. At times one hears English, French, Flemish, Arabian, the Moroccan patois of the Goumiers, and Hindustanee. The station is full of soldiers of all arms and of all the races that are fighting for the allies.

Belgian Troops Show Trial.

All the tragedy of Belgium—the maximum of moral suffering, the limit of physical endurance—seems visible in the grave expressions of the soldiers who have been making a stand for the last little free corner of their country. The depressed feeling that these faces inspire was increased, when, the other day, a file of nearly 400 field guns was dragged through by horses that looked as weary and melancholy as their riders. They were the guns that had defended Antwerp. The guns were going to the scrap heap.

After the procession of worn out guns came more refugees, who were perhaps the most disheartened of those who have passed through. Some of them were at Furnes the other day when a brief lull in the fighting gave the tired troops a needed repose, and when the report came that the Germans were retiring from before Dixmude.

Enemy Suddenly Renews Attack.

The soldiers were lolling in the warm sunshine in the streets and the officers calmly taking their afternoon tea when the bursting of a shell in a three story building on the historic square opposite the city hall brought them back to the realization that they were still near the front.

The stone front of the building fell into a pile in the street. Then the steady fire of an artillery duel was heard from all along the front. The British fleet joined in sending in its projectiles over the town into the German lines.

The Belgian soldiers, who, after the retreat from Antwerp were to be given a long rest, were once again drawn into the thick of the fighting. King Albert was with his men on the firing line.

GOOD FELLOWS' OFFERS POUR IN FOR CHRISTMAS

"Act Now" Is Motto of Band That Begs Right to Make Chicago's Poor Happy.

Responses to THE TRIBUNE's Good Fellow Christmas appeal in behalf of Chicago's poor came in showers yesterday.

The members of that unorganized secret order of Good Fellows, who for several years have been filling the stockings of the thousands of children in the homes of want, are determined to make ready for their Christmas giving right away.

The Christmas lists under investigation will be ready for assignment in a few days, and Good Fellows will be put right in touch with the needs and wants of the family.

Hub Employes Raise Fund.

The following letter received by the Good Fellow department is an illustration of the effective manner in which Good Fellows are combining their efforts to further the big work of helping the unfortunates.

"We are inclosing herewith a check for $76 which has been collected by the employés of The Hub, Henry C. Lytton & Sons, for donation to the Good Fellow club.

"We heartily approve of the great work carried on by your paper, and trust that many other institutions will follow our example. Very truly yours,

"EMPLOYES OF THE HUB, Henry C. Lytton & Sons."

Plan That No One Is Overlooked.

The Good Fellow plan reached this year proposes to fit the needs of the poor family to the measure of giving desirable to the Good Fellow. That will eliminate disappointments and help to solve the problem of what to give.

Many of the requests for the names of the poor come in crisp short letters that denote the experienced Good Fellow—the Good Fellow who the previous years of THE TRIBUNE's Christmas efforts has learned just how the scheme works.

For example, a Good Fellow living in Bellevue place writes only:

"Send me the names of six families west of Clark street and between the river and Chicago avenue."

That Good Fellow knows there are a lot of folks in the region he described who will have to depend on the generous givers for any Christmas they may have.

Wants Twenty-five Families.

Another Good Fellow phoned:

"I'll take twenty-five families this year. Had a great time last year. Send along the names soon."

And one wrote:

"I will be Santa Claus to ten children this year. Please give me the names of that many needy children on the northwest side—as close together as possible."

Then a lot of Good Fellows simplified their answers by clipping the "John Jones" form letter and filling its blanks.

The Good Fellows come from everywhere and most every station in life, from affluence to just above the borderland of want. Many workers and wage earners appear in the lists of the generous.

Wants Them Near Home.

A busy man writes:

"I live at —— Drexel boulevard and will do what I can to care for about six children for Christmas. I would like to begin now. Please give me addresses as near to our own as possible, as my wife and I both work from 8 a. m. to 6:30 p. m., so we havn't much time. Good luck——."

A young woman who works writes:

"I would thank you kindly to send me the name and address of some needy family near my home whom I may take care of for Christmas. I am a working girl in moderate circumstances, and cannot take care of too large a family. Also kindly advise me what you may know regarding the names given, as I will have to go alone and at night, so I must be careful——."

All "Need the Same."

And here is the very best effort of a little girl who sent along a Santa Claus letter to the Good Fellow department:

"I am in good health but we have a large family and we had hard luck. Mamma is sick right along and my brother died the 11th of November and there is six children in the family. Papa's work is very poor. We think the Santa Claus won't come to visit us. But hope he will. We need clothes. My brother is 14 years old and is still going to school. He needs clothes and shoes. And I am 12 years old and need the same. Then my sister next to me is 11 and needs the same. Then my brother 9 years old needs the same. And a sister is 5 years old and needs the same. My littlest brother is 3 years old and needs the same. We are in hard luck right along."

But Don't Forget the Present.

The Christmas needs of the poor have not, however, made the Good Fellows forget the ever present need for help now and right along from day to day. Responses and contributions in generous measure are sent to aid the sick, the unemployed, and the penniless families listed in the great number of "war victims at home." The plan of administration of this aid through the trained workers of the United Charities is being continued quite apart from the Christmas campaign.

The Good Fellows who offer general relief become Christmas Good Fellows, too, and in turn the Christmas Good Fellows, as the experience of years past has shown, often continue their ministrations long after Christmas and through long periods of efficient relief work.

?—Her Christmas Plans—?

When this little girl's father died in August he left her a wealth of little brothers and sisters and a loving mother—but that was all. The seven in the family occupy two dark, cold rooms. The children go to school in the daytime, and the mother visits neighbors to keep warm. Relatives are able to give a little food. The family's Christmas plans are not made yet. (B. West side.)

Presents Make the Heart Grow Fonder; Try It, Good Fellows.

HERE are some folks for your Christmas list. Their only chance for a Christmas dinner is in the generosity of Good Fellows. They are in serious want now. They have both a problem of Christmas and a problem of today, tomorrow, and the next day. They are fellow citizens whose wants and needs have been carefully investigated. If you want to do anything for these folks send your name and address to the Good Fellow Department, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

C.—Mr. C. is unable to support his wife and seven children, as he has rheumatism and is only able to work about three days a week at $1.50 a day. Three months' rent is due. They owe $87 at the grocer's, and the children have been out of school because they lack clothing and shoes. Mrs. C. has done some sewing at her home, but her eyes are poor and she is now under the care of a friendly doctor. (West side.)

B.—Mr. B. was out of work this summer, but secured a job about six weeks ago at $9 a week. Of this he has been paying $3 a week on back rent, and Mrs. B. has tried to support their family of six children on the remainder. Mary, the oldest, is just 15. She has rheumatism and heart trouble, so is not able to stand factory work, but may outgrow it with proper food and care. To cap their troubles, ten days ago Mr. B. was injured at the factory. Children have no clothes for winter; they have no money for coal and grocer will trust them but a few days longer. (West side.)

P.—The family of husband, wife, and six children needs most everything that is necessary to sustain life. All the savings they had acumulated have been spent through a long period of unemployment. One daughter, 18 years old, earns $2 a week, and that is the sole income. The most pressing need of the family now is a stove to heat the two rooms they call home. (Northern district.)

D.—Mrs. D. is a widow whose husband was killed last spring by an elevator and she was unable to secure any compensation. She was left with four children and a baby was born two months ago. She had previously made $1 or $1.50 a week making tags at home, but is now unable to do so. She is attending English class to make herself eligible for a funds to parents pension eighteen months hence. Needs $5 for rent and $3.50 a week for food to supplement county rations. ([B.] West side.)

WAR FILMS STAY AT STUDEBAKER ANOTHER WEEK

Attendance Figures Break Record Set by Sarah Bernhardt Movies.

Intense public interest in THE TRIBUNE's motion pictures of the European war, the demand of Chicagoans to see these stirring transplanted battle scenes, has resulted in the booking of the films for another week at the Studebaker theater.

The last week's attendance during the showing of the war films at the Studebaker nearly doubled the previous high mark of attendance for a film attraction at that house. The people flocked in by thousands to see the four reels of motion pictures taken on the battle fields of war torn Belgium by Edwin F. Weigle, staff photographer for THE TRIBUNE. The pictures were shown from 11 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock at night.

Mr. Weigle Will Appear.

Through the coming week Mr. Weigle will continue to appear at the Studebaker in connection with the showing of the pictures.

In discussing the remarkable attendance record at the war film exhibitions, Aaron Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who control the Studebaker, said:

"The attendance at the Studebaker last week absolutely passed our greatest expectations. When we booked THE TRIBUNE's pictures we expected big crowds. We expected to reach the attendance record set by the Sarah Bernhardt production which played at the Studebaker, but the war pictures have played to nearly twice the number of people who attended the Bernhardt performances.

Congratulates Mr. Weigle.

"I believe a great number of people who saw the war pictures last week were sent to the Studebaker by friends who had previously seen them and who described some of the vivid scenes shown in the films. These are the first pictures of the actual fighting. Mr. Weigle and THE TRIBUNE are to be congratulated for the enterprise and daring represented in bringing these films to Chicago.

"We are looking forward to another big week next week. It may be possible that even last week's sensational record will be beaten."

CHURCH GIVES UNIQUE SHOW

Congress Park Methodist Holds Sunday School Industrial Exhibit After Four Months' Work.

Congress Park, one of Chicago's nearby suburbs which has only one church, a Methodist, concluded yesterday afternoon a three days' Sunday school industrial exhibit unique for churches not institutional in character. There were 532 exhibits and thirty-two ribbons were distributed for excellence in the different departments. It took four months to prepare for the exhibit.

The following sections were represented: Mechanical, Harry Skowbo, arts and crafts, Mrs. Ezra J. Keller; fancy work, Mrs. W. C. Anders; applied science, Melvin R. Kline; culinery, Mrs. W. J. Patterson; curios, Mrs. B. W. Radebaugh; youths' department, Mrs. E. J. Bierman.

The refreshments were in charge of Mrs. M. H. Harrison and the entertainment in charge of Miss Clover Kline. The Rev. W. L. Ruyle is pastor of the church and J. C. Kline superintendent of the Sunday school.

SHIVER BETTER THAN 'JIMMY'

Dyer Lets Suffering Wayfarer Sleep in Shop—Suit, Overcoat, and Gloves Gone.

A. Solomon, a cleaner and dyer at 8916 Commercial avenue, pitied a poorly dressed man who walked into his store Friday night and asked for a place to sleep. The man was shivering and said he was penniless. Solomon allowed him to sleep in the store. When Solomon "opened up" yesterday the man was gone, as was a suit, an overcoat, and several pairs of gloves, all valued at $60.

Your Best Today Is Tomorrow's Start.

THE head of a manufacturing business yesterday sent a contribution to the Good Fellow fund with this remark: "The great number of applications we have here for work makes us realize what opportunities there are for the good work you are leading." Dollars sent the Good Fellow way get a maximum of efficiency in relieving the suffering of unfortunates.

It is desirable for the administration of the contributions that all contributors state in remitting whether their gift is for the giving of general relief to the poor or for the Christmas Good Fellow work. Here is yesterday's list:

FIANCE FINDS GIRL DEAD FROM GAS; WEDDING NEAR.

Body of Anna Bergman Discovered When Suitor Calls to Take Her to "Movie"—Heater Still Burning.

Anna Bergman sat in her room at the end of the back hall on the fourth floor of a rooming house at 1356 Washington boulevard Friday night and talked with Paul Rose, her fiancé, about their marriage next Wednesday. Rose stayed until after 10 o'clock. Just before leaving Anna asked him to light the gas heater to "take the chill off the room."

Rose came back late yesterday to take Miss Bergman to a "movie." The door to her room was locked. The landlady said Anna had not been seen all day. Rose went back to his fiancée's room and pounded on the door.

Then he noticed the odor of gas. Other roomers, who came in response to Rose's cry, broke open the door and found the girl dead. The heater still was burning and the connections between the heater and the wall jet apparently were tight, but the room was full of gas.

A coroner's inquest, to be held today at undertaking rooms at 1340 Madison street, will attempt to ascertain the circumstances of the death.

NO, INDEED! CO-EDS SHOULD NOT OBJECT TO CHAPERONS

Self-Government Body Holds Right Kind of Social Censors Are No Bar to College Courtships.

Chaperons for co-eds when they go out with students should not be objectionable to the young women or their escorts, it was decided yesterday at the final session of the third annual convention of the Woman's Self-government association in University hall, Northwestern university.

The twenty-nine delegates to the convention discussed the question and announced afterward that it was the consensus of opinion "that the right kind of chaperons would not be objected to by the right kind of young women."

Coöperative boarding houses also were discussed. It was suggested that matrons of boarding houses in college towns form leagues, maintain a better standard of meals, and establish a scale of prices.

COUNTY AGENT APPOINTS TEN MORE INVESTIGATORS.

Finds Force Inadequate to Look After Increasing Demands of Chicago's Poor.

Ten additional investigators were put to work yesterday by County Agent Joseph Meyer.

"An addition to the force was needed, as present indications are that this is going to be one of the worst winters the poor have had to face in the history of the county," said Mr. Meyer.

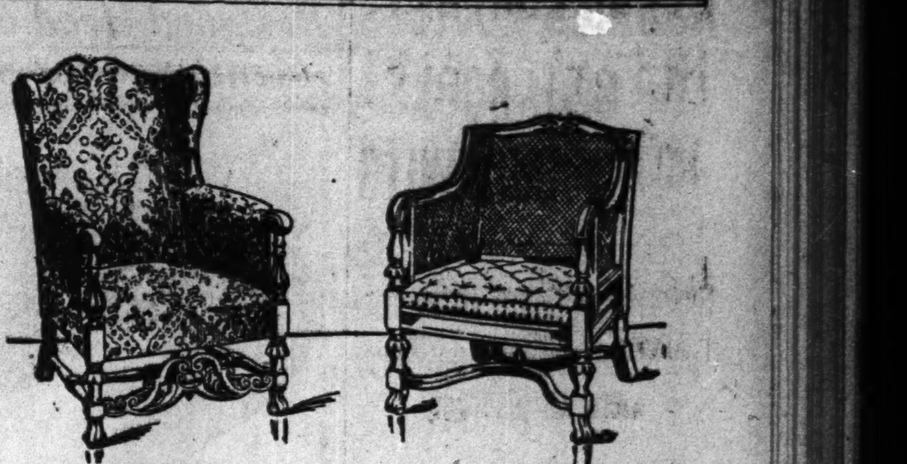
Mrs. Anna L. Sheridan and Miss Hannah Rowe, who were among the ten who stood highest in the examination held by the county civil service commission, began work yesterday.

"We find the greatest distress has been felt in the Polish districts in South Chicago and in the vicinity of our Ashland avenue station," said J. K. Brenton, assistant to Mr. Meyer. "Two investigators will be assigned to each of these stations."

JUDGE TURNS JOB HUNTER.

Refuses to Send Homeless Woman to Bridewell and Seeks Work for Her.

Municipal Judge Sabath yesterday refused to send Mrs. Delia Burke to the bridewell after the latter had pleaded for a home for the winter. Instead, Judge Sabath gave the woman $2 and told her he would obtain a position for her.



WE have done a good deal of talking about furniture for the living room; nearly everyone is interested in this particular thing just now; and while we have talked upholstered pieces, and comfort, there's one kind of chairs that we haven't said much about.

These are the chairs like those shown in the illustration; beautiful in design; extremely comfortable; splendidly made and easily moved about; all of these things are very desirable.

Nothing can surpass Scholle's upholstered chairs for the living room; but for lightening up the heavy looks of a big room, or for furnishing a smaller room, where looks and comfort are desired, these smaller chairs are perfection.

It Is Warranted and Sold on Easy Monthly or Weekly Payments

The economic feature of making a player out of your own splendid piano instead of sustaining a loss by trading it in on a new one must appeal to you, if for no other reason than the saving of $150 to $400, or even more, and then again, there are no risks regarding the quality of the instrument, for you know your own "tried and proven true piano" and love its tone. We are installing this player mechanism in instruments all over the United States and have hundreds of them in Chicago homes. Will gladly give you the names of prominent users. ASSAILS AUDIT OF CAR BOOKS BY BECKWITH the questions raised by the accountants to the satisfaction of the committee.

Supervising Board Calls Corporation Counsel's Opinions Wide of the Law.

Mayor Takes a Hand.

Half way through the task of disposing of the matter the committee was halted by Mayor Harrison's proposal for a complete investigation covering the entire seven years since the passage of the traction ordinances. Upon his initiative an appropriation of $50,000 was voted and City Controller Traeger was authorized to select the accountants.

Mr. Traeger instructed Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. to proceed upon the books of the Chicago City Railway company and M. & L. W. Scudder, a New York firm, were put upon the records of the Chicago Railways company. Each was instructed to prepare two reports—one in conformity with the rulings of the supervising board and the other following the advice of the law department. It was in this manner the accountants obtained the opinions to which the supervising board and Attorney Fisher now seriously object.

Cites Two Opinions.

That which Mr. Fisher declares to constitute a complete reversal of opinion on the part of the corporation counsel is contained in two legal opinions given by Mr. Beckwith, one before there was any friction between the board of supervising engineers and Mayor Harrison, and the other delivered recently.

These opinions deal with the authority of the board to establish an accounting principle in such cases as the city ordinances did not specifically provide an accounting theory. Mr. Fisher asserted the earlier opinion of Mr. Beckwith clearly established this right, while the later one denied it, and further termed the first opinion merely a "warning."

Quotations from Beckwith.

Before the unification ordinance of 1913 was passed Mr. Beckwith said:

"To put the situation in other words, the passage of the provisions of section 3 will constitute an estoppel against the city to claim that the basis of accounting heretofore adopted by the board of supervising engineers and urged by the companies with regard to all matters in dispute under the traction ordinances is incorrect, because of the fact that this ordinance substantially in terms confirms and ratifies such previous methods of accounting. This question, however, resolves itself into one of policy, as to waiver, for the city council to determine."

Here's Reversal Opinion.

Later, on Oct. 24, 1914, he declared:

"I took occasion, out of what may have been an excess of caution, to volunteer a word of warning concerning this section, but, as appears from my opinion of Oct. 27, 1913, it was a warning as distinguished from a construction of the ordinance, and, after that warning was given section 3 of the ordinance in question was amended in several material particulars. I therefore advise you that the ordinance of Nov. 13, 1913, has no effect upon the ordinances of Feb. 11, 1907, which constitute the basis of accounting between the city and the companies, except in the particulars specifically enumerated herein, and the same is true as to the methods of accounting."

Views of Fisher.

Mr. Fisher, on the contrary, holds the decision as to these questions was expressly and necessarily left to the board of supervising engineers. He said:

"Probably the most important questions of accounting to be decided under the ordinances of 1907 are based upon the classification of expenditures as between capital account and the accounts for maintenance, repairs, and renewals. The decision of these questions (under the general provisions of the ordinances) was expressly left to the board of supervising engineers and to the board of supervising engineers alone.

"Indeed, they could not well have been left to any one else because they must always be a mixed question of engineering and accounting. It was therefore explicitly provided in section 7 of each of the traction ordinances of 1907 that 'the said board of supervising engineers shall have power to determine what work shall be treated as construction, reconstruction, equipment, reëquipment, extensions, new lines, underground trolleys, or additions to plant or property to be paid for by the company out of the capital funds to be provided by it for that purpose, and what shall be treated as maintenance, repairs, and renewals to be paid for out of the gross receipts of the company from the operation of the street railway system hereby authorized.'

Nothing to Conceal.

Mr. Fisher called attention to the fact that the city has at all times had the fullest information and the fullest opportunity for investigating everything which has been done by the supervising board, and that until the present no fault has been found with its accounting methods. He said the questions raised by the city officials and by accountants had been thrashed out before the local transportation committee and the supervising board.

The counsel for Mr. Arnold held that Mr. Beckwith was right in his first opinion, when he held that the unification ordinance confirmed and ratified the methods of accounting in use previous to that time.

The board of supervising engineers contends that if Mr. Fisher's construction of the ordinance is correct, it necessarily follows there is little or nothing in any other points which may be raised by the corporation counsel.

Sharp Conflict Seen.

On practically all of the opinions rendered by the corporation counsel and Attorney Fisher, in the opinion of Bion J. Arnold, there is sharp conflict between their construction of the points and ordinances at issue. The conflict is said to be illustrated in the question of paving, which involves the bookkeeping entry of some $6,000,000 of paving.

The corporation counsel has held the expenditures for paving are no more necessary for a street railway company operating in the streets of a city than for a steam railroad. He draws a distinction between a foundation upon which the paving rests and the paving block itself, reaching the conclusion that it is proper to charge the cost of the foundation to capital, but not the cost of putting down the granite blocks.

What of Street Paving?

The corporation counsel says:

"So far as the paving proper is concerned, it is no more an essential part of the plant and property of the company than it would be an essential part of the plant and property of a steam railroad company. So far as the operation of either road is concerned, the paving proper as distinguished from the foundation upon which it is laid, serves no useful purpose and should not, therefore, in our opinion, be charged to capital."

Ordinance Provision Answer.

Mr. Fisher replies to this opinion by saying the ordinance of 1907 specifically provides the cost of paving shall not be charged to maintenance. He said:

"Under the old ordinances the paving of the rights of way was the only compensation which the city obtained. Under the ordinances of 1907 the city was to receive 55 per cent of the net receipts, and the extensive paving required was not to be considered as an operating expense. Expenditures for paving were to be treated in all respects like expenditures for other kinds of construction or reconstruction work."

Likewise the ordinance of 1913, according to Mr. Fisher, in establishing a basis for paving renewals, backs up his contention.

City Might Lose $3,300,000.

It is declared that if the corporation counsel is right in saying the cost of paving is not a part of construction and should not be charged to capital, but to operation, just as sprinkling or sweeping the street is charged to operation, approximately $6,000,000 has been charged to capital which should be charged to operation. It would also mean, it is declared by Mr. Fisher, that the city would be obliged to refund out of its traction fund 55 per cent of this amount, or $3,300,000.

A similar disputed opinion arises in the case of the removal of elevated railroad pillars to make way for the laying of through route curves for the surface lines. The connecting columns had to be moved in order to make way for the larger cars placed in use.

The elevated railroad would not pay the cost of the removal, and the surface lines were obliged to do so. The work cost about $180,000, which was charged to construction.

Straight Conflict Seen.

The corporation counsel in his opinion declared this expense should be charged to operation, not to improvements, because, he said, the surface lines did not own the pillars. He said:

"I beg to advise you that inasmuch as the work of such removal cannot be regarded as a part of the plant or property of the company, we are of the opinion that such expenditures should be charged to operation and not to capital."

Mr. Fisher said he does not understand the opinion of the corporation counsel. He commented:

"The opinion of the corporation counsel is so brief that it is impossible to ascertain from it how he could have possibly arrived at the conclusion he states. I am led to believe that his opinion is based upon a misapprehension of the facts."

Concluding, Mr. Fisher said:

"I am of the opinion that under the circumstances above outlined the cost of moving elevated railway columns is to be treated precisely upon the same basis as is the cost of relocating and reconstructing the tracks of the surface lines themselves. It is indeed a part of the cost of reconstruction, and under the express terms of the ordinances of 1907:

"There shall be charged to capital the excess amount that the new property cost over the original cost of the property displaced, excepting that the value of property contained in the appraisal inventory of the property of the company referred to in paragraph 1 of section 20 hereof shall be used instead of first cost for all property listed in such appraisal inventory. (Sec. 7.)

His Final Argument.

"The cost of reconstructing or replacing tracks is not confined to the materials which constitute the new track after it is constructed, nor to the labor of putting this material in place. It includes the removal of the old track, the preparation of the space in which the new track is to be laid, and readjustment of such structures as occupy or impinge upon this space and must necessarily be readjusted in order to permit the new structure to be properly built and operated; thus it is frequently necessary to relocate catch basins, sewer pipes, water pipes, and other structures which would not be disturbed but for the work of the street railway companies in reconstructing its lines to meet the requirements of its ordinances."

BRIDGETENDER WRECKS CAR; SAVES SIXTY PASSENGERS.

Milwaukee Man Traps and Crushes Front of Coach, Preventing Plunge Into River.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 21.—John Chambers, bridgetender, wrecked a street car on the bascule bridge at West Water street late today to save sixty persons from death in the waters of the Menomonee river. The motorman and one passenger were seriously injured and twenty others, mostly women, received minor hurts.

The car ran on to the north bridge approach as the leaf was being raised. The car was only a few feet from the yawning space when Chambers dropped the south leaf, crushing the front vestibule of the car.

Chambers says the alarm bell was ringing and other signals were properly displayed.

PEORIA BREWING COMPANY AND DISTILLERY INDICTED.

Face Possible Fines of Near $150,000 Each for Falsely Stating Weights of Shipments.

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 21.—The federal grand jury today returned indictments against the Union Brewing company and Clarke Bros. distillery, charging them with falsely stating weights of shipments on bills of lading and falsely describing shipments.

The indictment against the Union Brewing company contains twenty-eight counts and the maximum fine would be $140,000.

Three indictments, containing thirty-two counts, were returned against the Clarke company. Maximum penalties in the Clarke case would be $160,000, or two years in the penitentiary on each count.

PEORIA CATTLE RUSHED HERE

CLOSE WATCH IS KEPT.

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 21.—One hundred carloads of cattle were sent out of here tonight by Morris & Co. and the balance of a shipment of 6,000 will be completed tomorrow night. The rush order to ship this herd to Chicago was caused by state and federal officials discovering evidence of the foot and mouth disease in sixty of a lot of 6,000 cattle being fattened by Morris & Co. at the Great Western distillery here.

Close Guard Kept.

No evidence of the disease has been found at Corning and Clark cattle barns, where over 18,000 head of cattle are being fattened. A close guard is being maintained, and the feeding of hay has been abandoned. No sign of the disease has shown itself at the Peoria stock yards since they were disinfected and reopened a week ago.

Continue Killing Cattle.

Sterling, Ill., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—State Veterinarians Hoover and Clark and Government Experts Eason and Warner today killed 175 fat steers and several hundred hogs showing symptoms of hoof and mouth disease. During the week 1,500 cattle and 2,700 hogs have been killed in Whiteside county.

228 NEW STREET CARS DUE FOR CHICAGO NEXT WEEK.

President Leonard Busby Makes Report on Surface Lines and Urges Downtown Subways.

Since the beginning of the year 528 new cars have been ordered by the Chicago surface lines, according to a report of President Leonard A. Busby, which was given out yesterday by Bion J. Arnold, chairman of the board of supervising engineers. The total cost of these cars is $3,000,000, and a majority of them have been put into service, says Mr. Busby. Delivery of 228 new cars from Philadelphia is expected next week. With the increased equipment it is proposed to eliminate entirely the use of single truck cars.

The report deals with improvements of service under the unification ordinance. The greatest difficulty to contend with, according to President Busby, is the congestion in the downtown district, which delays traffic. Downtown subways are suggested as the only remedy for this condition.

CREDITS PILGRIM FATHERS WITH BEST REFERENDUM.

Speaker at Banquet of Mayflower Descendants Praises Citizens That Come from the Stock of 1620.

The best referendum ever devised was that of the Pilgrim fathers, the Rev. William E. Barton said in an address at the eighteenth annual banquet of the Society of Mayflower Descendants, Illinois branch, at the Blackstone hotel last night.

He said that the Mayflower gave the country the best prototype of American homes, and declared that it is "up to us to see if we can in the coming 300 years have a posterity much better than that of today."

The dinner commemorated the 294th anniversary of the signing of the "compact" in the cabin of the Mayflower in Provincetown harbor, Nov. 21, 1620.

Bishop Charles Edward Cheney, governor of the society, as toastmaster, spoke of the days of the Pilgrim fathers, and Prof. Francis W. Shepardson of the University of Chicago responded to "Desiring a Better Country."

Some Retailers' Efforts to Boost Cost Met by Reductions in Other Sections.

Food Prices Far Below Last Year.

An estimate of average changes in prices of foodstuffs since a year ago was made by one big retailer yesterday along these lines:

	Per cent cheaper.
Fruit and produce	20
Poultry	10
Coffee	15
Canned goods	15
	Per cent higher.
Sugar	10
Flour	20

In numerous individual items, like apples, the cut appeared to be as much as 50 per cent.

An apparent effort on the part of certain dealers in foodstuffs to take advantage of the coming Thanksgiving festival by arbitrarily raising prices has precipitated a virtual price war in Chicago's retail markets.

While 25 cents a pound is declared by competent fancy poulterers to be the limit at which fresh dressed turkeys should be sold at retail for next Thursday's big feed, an investigation by a representative of THE TRIBUNE disclosed that as high as 30 cents is being asked by retailers in some of the boulevard districts. One retailer, who makes a specialty of turkeys however, predicted that Thanksgiving would find him selling them freshly picked for not to exceed 22 cents or 23 cents a pound.

A similarly wide variance was discovered in the prices asked for cuts of meat and for vegetables. The reporter who went the rounds of some of the better known retail grocery and market stores found that practically all articles of food in common use are surprisingly cheap, as compared with last year, and that there is even reason to believe that there exists no sufficient cause for the 10 per cent rise in the price of meat which numerous retailers say they have experienced since a year ago.

Wide Differences in Prices.

No satisfactory explanation was discernible, however, for differences of as much as 10 cents per pound for sirloin steak in retail stores, and proportionately as great variations in the prices asked for fruits and vegetables, which appeared to be without difference in grade.

I. Cohen of Cohen & Co., wholesale poultry and produce dealers at 108 West South Water street, asserted that the only reason for high prices in the markets in the more prosperous appearing neighborhoods is that customers in those districts drive grocery and market men almost to desperation by neglecting to pay their bills, and that consequently the dealer puts on an added price burden, which falls upon the prompt payer and the nonpayer alike.

Cash Buyers Bear the Burden.

"In some localities the cash buyers will be paying 5 cents a pound too much for turkeys and proportionately too much for other things because their neighbors who run accounts sometimes go as long as four months, 120 days, without paying any money to the grocer. This year, however, I see no reason for deviating from my statement made some time ago that there should be no excuse for asking more than 25 cents a pound for fine fresh turkeys over any retail counter in Chicago this Thanksgiving season.

"Twenty-seven cents for an especially choice, scientificically fatted bird should be the outside limit, even if the turkey is going to the White House, and such birds are decided specialties.

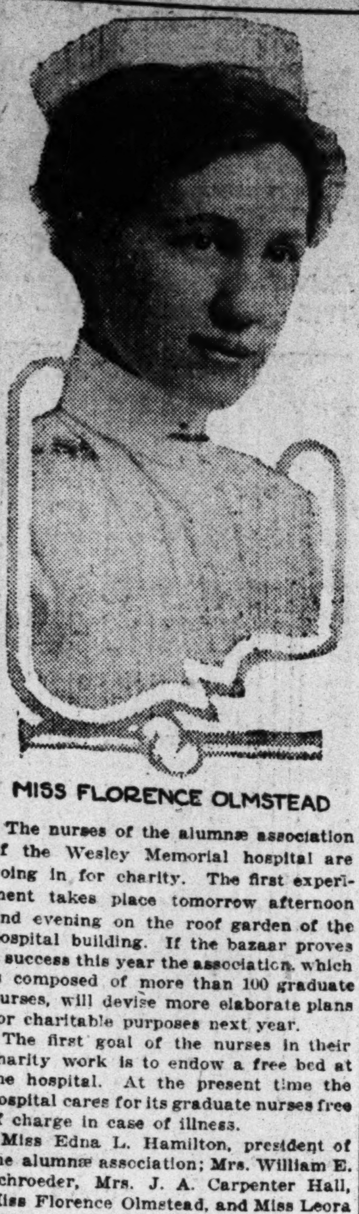
Attempt to Force Price Up Fails.

"The 1 cent rise in the price of turkeys earlier this week apparently was an attempt to force the market higher for the holiday, but the drop back to the lower level indicates that this purpose has been defeated," continued Mr. Cohen. "The general public little realizes the drop in the price of poultry that has taken place since a year ago. If people realized that fresh dressed chickens and geese can be had for only 15 cents a pound at retail they would take advantage of the fact to further reduce their cost of living."

Alexander Irwin, of Irwin Brothers, meat retailers, was authority for the statement that meat should not retail for more than it sold a year ago.

In exemplification of his statement he quoted sirloin steak at 12½ cents to 25 cents a pound, depending upon choiceness; porterhouse steak at from 17½ cents to 30 cents a pound, round steak at from 16 cents to 17 cents a pound, and boiling pieces at 12½ cents. Pork chops were selling for 18 cents and choice ham at 16 to 17 cents.

Nurses to Hold Charity Bazaar.



MISS FLORENCE OLMSTEAD

The nurses of the alumnæ association of the Wesley Memorial hospital are going in for charity. The first experiment takes place tomorrow afternoon and evening on the roof garden of the hospital building. If the bazaar proves a success this year the association, which is composed of more than 100 graduate nurses, will devise more elaborate plans for charitable purposes next year.

The first goal of the nurses in their charity work is to endow a free bed at the hospital. At the present time the hospital cares for its graduate nurses free of charge in case of illness.

Miss Edna L. Hamilton, president of the alumnæ association; Mrs. William E. Schroeder, Mrs. J. A. Carpenter Hall, Miss Florence Olmstead, and Miss Leora Pitts are members of the executive committee. Miss Elizabeth Jones is chairman of the advertising committee.

'HANGING BEE' IN ARIZONA DEC. 19; 11 MEN DOOMED

Voters Gave O. K. to the Death Penalty, but Warden May Quit Rather than Act.

Phœnix, Ariz., Nov. 21.—Eleven men, six Americans and five Mexicans, will be hanged in Florence penitentiary in one day, Dec. 19, for murder.

The people of the state pronounced their doom by voting against the abolishment of the death penalty Nov. 3, Gov. W. P. Hunt said today, and he therefore will not interfere.

Warden Opposes Hanging.

R. B. Sims, warden of the penitentiary, will resign, it is said, rather than spring the trap which will drop the eleven condemned men to death. Sims did not answer a telegraphic request today for confirmation of this report and Gov. Hunt declined to comment upon it.

Besides the eleven designated for death Dec. 19 three other men have been condemned to hang, and the governor declared he would not interfere in their cases either.

Gov. Hunt Blames Foes.

"The death of these fourteen men will rest upon the heads of those who voted against the abolition of capital punishment," Gov. Hunt said. "The defeat of the measure may be attributed to corporate and journalistic interests unfriendly to me, and three or four of the principal parties who helped to defeat it should be made to pull the rope. Also, if the death penalty is a good thing, the executions should be made more impressive by erecting the gallows in the public square."

First "Bee" in Hunt's Regime.

The "hanging bee" Dec. 19 will be the first executions under state authority since Gov. Hunt assumed office.

Gov. Hunt had reprieved the convicted men from time to time pending the vote, which was taken Nov. 3.

PRINCETON SHOW HERE SOON

The Princeton Triangle club, the dramatic organization of Princeton university, will pay its annual visit to Chicago on Dec. 29. The production this year is "Fie! Fie! Fi-Fi." The committee in charge of the performance has announced that the proceeds will be given to the Chicago Red Cross fund for the relief of European war victims. The book, lyrics, and music of the play all are written by undergraduates and the organization goes still further by having the costumes, scenery, lighting effects, and posters designed by club members. With the actors goes an orchestra of students conducted by an undergraduate.

"CALL OF WILD" LURES HUSBAND

Wife in Divorce Court Shows Confession of Her Recreant Mate.

DESERTED AS A BRIDE.

The Charles L. Andersons were married in 1903, and after the ceremony Anderson took his bride to the home of his parents in Lexington, Ky. After two weeks, the wife, who is now suing for divorce, asserts, he left, saying he was going to Cincinnati and go to work. In a day or so he would send for his bride, Mrs. Anderson claims he said.

Three weeks passed without a letter. Then Mrs. Anderson, who appeared before Judge Kavanagh in the Superior court yesterday, says he wrote her to return to her home in Chicago. She says she did this, and their married life has been of an indifferent sort ever since. Mrs. Anderson says he has not seen her or his two little girls in three years.

Wife Submits a Letter.

She introduced a letter from her husband dated in Lexington on Aug. 5, 1914, as evidence. It reads in part:

"Dear Little Woman: I suppose that tonight you are a free woman. I can't help but wonder what your feelings are, now that you are separated from the man so little in common with your own nature. Dear girl, I hope you every happiness you can get out of life. Try and believe me sincere in my good will and hopes for your future.

"But we were so different and so little suited to each other. Then, too, the glitter and glare of the white lights and the easy money of the underworld was so strong an appeal to the 'call of the wild' within me.

Longs for His Bride.

"But with all the money I've wasted there's many times my heart has longed for the little girl in white who stood up with me that night so long ago.

"But enough—I tell you this because you are no longer mine. May God bless you and the little ones—the three lost ones of a wayward man. Good-by, you sweet girl of long ago.

"With a tear from the eye of a hardened man to his lost love, your discarded husband, CHARLES."

Judge Walker in the Circuit court granted decrees of divorce to Mrs. Belle McDowell of 61 East Twenty-second street, Lewis Pierce of 818 Cass street, and Mrs. Sylvia M. Glay of Norwood Park.

"He became angry one night," testified Mrs. McDowell concerning her husband, Orville, "and chased me out of the house. All I had on was a kimono."

THIEF SNATCHES HER MUFF.

Seizes Fur Piece Carried by Mrs. E. S. McLaughlin and Darts Away.

The muff snatcher has arrived, along with the winter. Mrs. E. S. McLaughlin of 210 Laflin street was passing an alley in Laflin street last night when a man darted out, seized her mink muff, and dashed away. A pocketbook which was inside fell out, but was ignored. Mrs. McLaughlin said she would pay a reward and ask no unnecessary questions if the muff is returned.

LAWYER DEPICTS IN HOMELY VERSE ACTORS OF LIFE

Spoon River in His Anthology Is Just Any Hamlet, Town, and City.

Edgar Lee Masters, who has practiced law in Chicago for more than twenty years, is the author of the "Spoon River Anthology," a group of poems in free verse which has been printed serially in "Reedy's Mirror," under the pseudonym "Webster Ford." Macmillan will publish the anthology when it has been completed, Mr. Masters announced yesterday.

Spoon river, in fact, is a small tributary which flows into the Illinois river near Havana, Ill. It is the cemetery at Havana, whose dead speak their life stories in the poems, though they speak not as in life but with a larger vision of what they have accomplishd. "Spoon river is just any central Illinois town," Mr. Masters explained.

Here Is Typical Poem.

Typical of his sketches is the following, like all the poems bearing the name of the subject as its title. It is called "Lambert Hutchins."

I have two monuments besides this granite obelisk:
One, the house I built on the hill,
With its spires, bay windows, and roof of slate;
The other, the lake front in Chicago,
Where the railroad keeps a switching yard,
With whistling engines and crunching wheels,
And smoke and soot thrown over the city,
And the crash of cars along the boulevard—
A blot like a hog pen on the harbor
Of a great metropolis, foul as a sty.
I helped to give this heritage
To generations yet unborn, with my vote
In the house of representatives,
And the lure of the thing was to be at rest
From the never ending fright of need,
And to give my daughters gentle breeding
And a sense of security in life;
But, you see, though I had the mansion house,
And traveling passes, and local distinction,
I could hear the whispers, whispers, whispers,
Wherever I went, and my daughters grew up
With a look as if some one were about to strike them,
And they married madly, helter-skelter,
Just to get out and have a change.
And what was the whole of the business worth?
Why, it wasn't worth a damn!

Gay Life of an Army Man.

Quite as typical is the following, which is, among other things, a commentary on the effect of army life on the soldier. It is called "Mrs. Kessler":

Mr. Kessler, you know, was in the army,
And he drew six dollars a month as a pension,
And stood on the corner talking politics,
Or sat at home reading Grant's memoirs,
And I supported the family by washing,
Learning the secrets of all the people
From the curtains, counterpanes, shirts, and skirts.
For things that are new grow old at length,
They're replaced with better or none at all;
People are prospering or falling back.
And rents and patches widen with time;
No thread or needle can pace decay,
And there are stains that baffle soap,
And there are colors that run in spite of you,
Blamed though you are for spoiling a dress.
Handkerchiefs, napery have their secrets—
The laundress Life knows all about it.
And I, who went to all the funerals
Held in Spoon River, swear I never Saw a dead face without thinking it looked Like something washed and ironed.

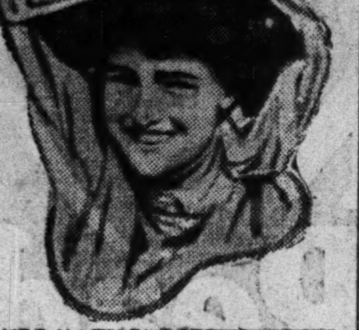
The anthology is not Mr. Master's first work in verse. He has published "A Book of Verses" and "Maximilian," a blank verse drama. The present work was started early in the summer.

She Keeps Wedding Secret 6 Months.



MRS. ALLEN BURGESS CARTER.

For almost six months Miss Frances Drake of St. Joseph, Mich., and Allen Burgess Carter of Benton Harbor and Chicago kept the momentous event in their lives a secret. They were married on June 4, but their friends were not notified. Mrs. J. D. Stafford of the Hyde Park hotel, 1511 East Fifty-first street, told why.

"My sister felt she could not leave our parents," Mrs. Stafford says. "Father is 80 years old and mother is an invalid."

Mrs. Carter is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Drake of St. Joseph.

MURDER STORY STIRS AURORA

POLICE GET A CLEW.

Says Slayer Lay in Wait.

"Everything," he said, "indicates the murderer lay in wait for his victim more than one night, ready to strike when the favorable opportunity should present itself.

"Pastor Tapper of the Free Methodist church has told me an uncontrovertible story of the man who hid beneath a pile of leaves in the yard in front of his cottage the night before the murder. The night before that, too, the man was there.

"Miss Miller was a methodical person—'sot,' her friends called her. Just as she ordered the other part of her day's routine, so she always returned home by the same route. The corner of Clark and Lincoln—the corner by the church yard—was the only dark spot along the way.

"The man who wielded the wrench knew whom he was striking. If he carried away her handbag it was for another purpose than robbery."

Race Controversy Recalled.

Developments had been coming so rapidly during the day that Coroner Norton adjourned the inquest, subject to call, as soon as he had put his views of the "Miss Jennie's mystery" before the jurors.

One of these developments promises to bring William J. Tyers, state's attorney of Kane county, into action. Mr. Tyers has received information which lines with the coroner's theories.

More than a year ago, it seems, a race issue arose to threaten the prosperity of Miss Jennie's little circulating library on the "Island"—Aurora's "loop." A negro girl wanted to rent a book. Other dwellers in the negro colony, she told the spinster-librarian, were anxious to become her customers.

Miss Jennie, sure she would lose her white customers, were she not to bar the negroes, refused to rent the book. For a time feeling ran high and suit against Miss Jennie was threatened.

Questions for Girl's Brother.

When Miss Jennie felt she was being imposed upon she could say things that cut like a knife. In this case she felt called upon to say them. The resentment engendered by her words likely enough survived.

Now, the negro girl in question has a brother who is known as "a bad man." Twice he has served terms in Joliet, once for murderous assault. The brother was at liberty the night of the Jennie Miller murder.

"If this negro is still in town I am going to question him," said the prosecutor. "If he has gone and I learn he was here the night Miss Miller was attacked I am going to spare no pains to find him.

"I do not wish to be made to appear to be criticising Chief Michels and the police. They are doing all they can. I intend to coöperate with them. On Monday when the grand jury is discharged I shall have more time to give to the case and more money, too, if I can possibly raise it. If the funds at my disposal are sufficient I shall probably retain a Chicago detective agency to help us."

What of J. E. Shobble?

Chief Michels is still trying to learn what has become of the mysterious "J. E. Shobble of Plainfield," who disappeared from his room in the Burton apartments the night of the murder. "Shobble" occupied the room Monday and Tuesday nights, but failed to return on Wednesday, the night of the murder, although earlier in the evening he had paid in advance for lodging.

There is a man in Plainfield, a crossroads farming hamlet seventeen miles from Aurora, whose name the illiterate "Shobble" might have been trying to forge. The man is C. E. Schaubel, a farm hand. "Shobble" was not sure, it appears, of the spelling of the name he signed in the Burton register. The last night he made it "Shobbel," and once he left off the last syllable. The real Schaubel could not recall any man answering the description of the Burton apartments "Shobble."

Still another important clew may develop as the result of the questioning for which Sam Strong, the Illinois Central dining car waiter, who says he found Miss Jennie's handbag, will come in when he is brought back to Aurora. The local authorities are anxiously awaiting the moment when Strong, who lives here, will have completed his return trip from New Orleans.

CHICAGO WOMAN TO LEAD BELGIAN RED CROSS WORK.

Dr. Caroline Hedger Will Take Charge of Relief Measures for Thousands of Homeless Children.

Dr. Caroline Hedger, formerly in charge of the infant welfare work in Chicago, and her friend and assistant, Miss Janet Hall, will leave on Tuesday for Belgium to take charge of the work of caring for thousands of homeless children under the Belgian Red Cross. They will sail from New York for Liverpool on the American liner Philadelphia on Nov. 28.

The Chicago Woman's club has raised $2,000 to defray their expenses. From Chicago they will carry 10,000 doses of typhoid vaccine prepared and donated by Dr. Mary C. Lincoln at a cost of $5,000. In New York they will be given 10,000 vaccine needles and $700 worth of dressings by the Red Cross association.

Dr. Hedger is going in response to an appeal from her old friend, Mrs. Anne Fowler von Schelle, wife of the chief of the Red Cross workers in Brussels. Mme. von Schelle urged Dr. Hedger to take charge of the infant welfare work in Brussels on her last visit to Chicago, when she was introduced to the Chicago physician by Miss Mary McDowell of the University of Chicago settlement.

Woman Taken on Fraud Charge.

Mrs. Ida Watson of 1821 West Madison street was arrested last night on a charge of operating a confidence game on complaint of Mrs. May Myers of 1232 West Madison street. Mrs. Myers said she purchased a rooming house from Mrs. Watson and when she went to take possession she found it empty.

NAVAL OFFICIALS TEST HAMMOND'S RADIO BOAT.

Son of Famous Engineer Invents Vessel Which Can Be Sailed Without Crew Aboard.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—A successful test of the radio boat built by John Hays Hammond, son of the mining engineer, has interested American naval officers in the invention, which, Mr. Hammond says, will revolutionize naval warfare.

The boat, named the Natalia, was set loose near Graves light, just outside of Boston harbor. Working his wireless station at Gloucester, twenty-eight miles away, young Hammond steered the boat at will.

There was nobody on the boat. The helm was guided entirely by wireless waves. The tests convinced the observer that a torpedo might be guided from shore with ease, even in the present stage of the development of the radio boat, while there are possibilities that a larger war craft might be so guided.

If the young inventor's dream is realized his boat will be so perfected that from shore it can be so directed far out at sea that it can destroy a hostile fleet without danger to sailors of the belligerent owning the radio boat, for it would be unmanned.

Canada Wants; Hospital Holds.

Samuel A. Jackson, 1445 Wells street, is held at the house of correction hospital awaiting arrival of a detective from Winnipeg, Can., where he is wanted on a charge of obtaining $1,710 by false pretenses. He was taken from his room to the hospital suffering from grip.

EAT A BIT, WALK A WAYS AND THEN THEY EAT AGAIN

Sorority Girls Stage a Ten Course Dinner in Ten Different Homes.

The champion Thanksgiving feasters so far heard from this season are sixteen sorority girls of the Omega Thi Upsilon chapter in the Englewood High school. They sat down to dine at 4 o'clock yesterday. At 10:30 o'clock last night they were still at it.

Ten tables were set in ten different dining rooms and the feasters progressed from home to home.

The first course of oyster cocktails was taken at the residence of Miss Marie Maher at 7028 Parnell avenue exactly at 4.

After a brisk walk of five blocks the girls paused at the home of Miss Marie Kerr, at 7258 South Halsted street, for a bowl of soup.

Fish Two Blocks Away.

A fish course was ready two blocks away at the home of Miss Celia McCarthy, 7305 Peoria street.

A fourth course of turkey and cranberry sauce was eaten with Miss Catherine Dunne at 7223 Peoria street.

Four blocks further the girls repasted on fruit salad. Miss Marie O'Connell of 7617 Peoria street was hostess No. 5.

The dinner progressed to the sixth course of ices and crackers at the home of Miss Margaret Clohefy at 7840 Morgan street.

Miss Mabelle McGovern of 7712 May street presided over a table laden with French pastry and coffee.

Ice Cream for the Marathoners.

Miss Gertrude Braclay of 7653 Aberdeen street was hostess for the eighth course of ice cream and cake.

The girls walked six blocks for the ninth course of fruit punch at the home of Miss Mabelle Quan at 7159 Aberdeen street. They traveled still farther to where Miss Catherine Long lives at 1024 West Eighty-seventh street for finger bowls which topped off the courses.

Miss Ruth Gowney of 7120 Morgan boulevard, Miss Laura Wingart of 7030 Parnell street, Miss Mabel North of 7214 Peoria street, Miss Bob Dunne, and Miss Lyla Barclay were the table decorators who preceded the pilgrimage of the feasters.

GLEASON PUTS 300 SLEUTHS BACK IN POLICE UNIFORM.

Fail to Pass Second Detective Sergeant Examinations to Fill Vacancies in Class.

Chief Gleason last night ordered more than 300 patrolmen acting as detectives to don uniforms because they did not pass the recent second class detective sergeants' examination which filled the vacancies in the detective class. Some of the oldest detectives on the force were affected. About twenty men at the detective bureau must go to uniforms.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21.—The final session of the American Federation of Labor was held tonight.

The convention gave indorsement to the declarations made by the executive council of the federation in its report against the horrors of war.

A resolution was adopted pledging the federation to support any plan which has for its purpose the bringing about of the disarmament of all nations to the furthest extent consistent with the preservation of law and order throughout the world.

The old officers were reëlected.

Drinks Insect Poison for Wine.

HUDSON MAXIM ANSWERS CRITIC

Asserts Brother, Who Accused Him, Never Invented Any Explosives.

CITES MANY RECORDS.

Hudson Maxim, the inventor, of Maxim Park at Landing, N. J., has replied in a letter to THE TRIBUNE to the charges against him by his brother Hiram, a former American now living in England. Hudson Maxim denies all his brother's charges. The letter in part follows:

"Most of the questions relating to priority of invention can be settled by referring to the records of the United States patent office and to the Astor-Tilden library, New York.

"Also the question as to whether or not the United States government has appropriated and adopted as a bursting charge for armor piercing projectiles Sir Hiram's absurd mixture of vaseline, di-nitro-benzol, and picric acid may be settled by communicating with the bureaus of ordnance of the United States army and navy.

Quotes from Booklet.

"I quote the following from a booklet issued by the Du Pont company in 1910 to controvert false charges made by Sir Hiram Maxim concerning our American smokeless powder in a letter which he had written to President Taft:

"'It must be evident to any one reading the article in Engineering and Sir Hiram's letter that they are the products of the same pen, and while the vanity displayed by the author may be pardoned, yet it is due those who become interested in this discussion to know that Sir Hiram Maxim's worldwide reputation was won by the invention of an automatic gun and not by any triumphs in the domain of powder. Candor and truth compel the statement that he never had anything to do with the manufacture of explosives of any character on a commercial scale, and nothing invented by him in explosives has been adopted by or employed in the service of any government on earth.'"

Hudson Maxim quotes the following report of Admiral N. E. Mason, chief of the bureau of ordnance, to the secretary of the navy:

"In regard to the statement of Sir Hiram Maxim that he has had great experience and knows what he is talking about, it has been shown that he is ignorant of the type of smokeless powder used by the United States government.

Shows Bit of Own Record.

"In regard to the part I myself have played in the development of smokeless powders," continues Hudson Maxim, "I quote the following from a statement made by Col. E. G. Buckner, vice president of the Du Pont company, published in Harper's Weekly of June 27, 1914:

"'The next problem was the adaptation of this powder to guns of different caliber. This problem was solved by Hudson Maxim, an employé of the Du Pont company, who invented the multi-perforated grain, and the Du Pont company was given credit for it by Mr. Tracy, secretary of the navy, in his annual report to congress. . . .

"In regard to the matter of changing my name, I did what Gen. Grant, and Roscoe Conkling, and many others have done. I changed my Christian name when a boy in school. I adopted the name Hudson and discarded the name Isaac, with the consent of my parents, between 1870 and 1871, about seventeen years before the advent of the Maxim gun."

FRANK JAMES OF OUTLAW FAME IS CLOSE TO DEATH

One of Brothers Who Terrorized Southwest Stricken with Heart Disease.

Excelsior Springs, Mo., Nov. 21.—Frank James, famous as a member of the band known as "the James gang," who terrorized the southwest during a period immediately following the civil war, was stricken with heart disease and was in a critical condition today at the James homestead, nine miles from this city. Tonight his condition showed improvement, physicians said.

James, who is 73 years old, has been living the life of a quiet farmer for more than thirty years.

The son of a minister, Frank James joned Quantrelle's guerrillas in the civil war, together with his brother, Jesse, and took part in the sacking of Lawrence, Kas.

Become Outlaw After the War.

When the war came to an end they were hunted far and wide by relatives of those who had met death at their hands. Driven here and there, they soon became outlaws. Many notorious rimes of the decade following the war have been laid at the door of the James-Younger gang of which the only surviving members are Frank James and Cole Younger, who now is living at Lees Summit, Mo. Among these deeds were:

The raid on the Commercial bank at Libertyville, Mo., in 1866. One bank defender was killed and $70,000 was stolen.

Looting of the Russellville, Ky., bank in 1868 for $17,000.

Bank robbery at Gallatin, Mo., in 1868. The cashier, Capt. John W. Sheets, was murdered.

Robbery of a bank at Columbia, Ky., in 1872. R. A. C. Martin, the cashier, was killed.

Raid on a bank at Corydon, Ia., in which $40,000 was stolen, in 1873.

Wrecked and Robbed Train.

The wrecking and robbing of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific train near Council Bluffs, Ia., in 1873. The engineer was killed, the fireman wounded, and several passengers injured.

Box office in the fair grounds at Kansas City, Mo., was robbed of $9,000 in broad daylight in 1873.

Detectives surrounded the James home near Kearney, Mo., Jan. 25, 1875, and threw a lighted bomb into the house, thinking to kill the James brothers. It exploded, tearing the arm off their mother and killing their brother, Archie.

In 1882, after Jesse James had been shot and killed in his hoime in St. Joseph, Mo., by Charles Ford, also a bandit, for a reward of $50,000, Frank James surrendered in Jefferson City, Mo.

KANSAS WHEAT SETS MARK.

Crop for 1914 Worth $151,583,032, Almost Double Value of Previous Record Yield.

Topeka, Kas., Nov. 21.—The Kansas wheat crop of 1914 amounted to 180,924,885 bushels, with a value estimated at $151,583,032, according to the annual wheat crop report of the Kansas board of agriculture, issued today. This is nearly double the value of the state's next most valuable wheat crop, that of 1909, when the estimated value of the crop was $75,941,000.

BOGEY IN LYING FOUND IN COURT

Judge Sabath Aroused Because Defendant Denies Everything.

HELD TO GRAND JURY.

When it comes to prevaricating as a fine art or as a necessity Cameron F. Brown of 6031 Ellis avenue can be listed in the "bogey" class.

"This man is the prize liar of them all among 40,000 cases to which I have listened," was the way Municipal Judge Sabath characterized him yesterday.

Mrs. Margaret Brown of 4821 North St. Louis avenue testified she was married to Brown in 1907.

"He disappeared several months ago," she said. "Then I learned he had married Mrs. Eva Sneider, a widow, at Crown Point, Ind., a week ago and had him arrested."

Brown looked at her casually, then more closely, took in the details of her dress and physical features from head to foot, turned to the court and with a blank expression of innocence said:

"Your honor, I have never seen this woman before in my life."

The man's manner was so convincing the judge lost his composure when Mrs Brown No. 1 produced a photograph taken on her honeymoon showing herself and Brown in a loving posture. The court held the defendant to the grand jury on a charge of bigamy in bonds of $5,000.

PEORIA MEN ARE CLEARED.

Coroner's Jury Exonerates Keithley and Faber in Connection with Editor's Death.

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 21.—The coroner's jury hearing evidence on the death of Eugene F. Baldwin, editor of the Peoria Star, this noon returned a verdict that he had come to his death from uræmic poisoning. It held that the beating he received on Oct. 3 at the hands of Giles Keithley, a young attorney, and Fred Faber, his brother-in-law, was in no way contributory to his death. Baldwin had attacked Keithley in articles in the Star.

Called to Explain Poll Books.

Judges and clerks from twenty-six election precincts were called to the election commissioners' office last night to explain discrepancies found in the poll books used at the recent election. After the explanations were made they were excused.

MAIBAUMS ARE DEPORTED; ON WAY BACK TO FRANCE.

Chicago Levee Characters Finally Are Ousted from United States by Immigration Authorities.

The time was when Charles Maibaum ensconced himself in a big red automobile and rode from dive to dive in the old south side levee district and collected his toll as the proprietor of houses. He owned the St. Charles hotel in South State street and his wife, a woman of the district, proved a fitting helpmeet.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Maibaum ended the last ride they will ever take in America when they were marched out of a railway coach in New York under guard and ferried over to Ellis island. From there they will be deported to France as moral undesirables.

Maibaum made a fortune in the vice traffic, but is reported to have spent it in his long fight to escape deportation. He took with him, nevertheless, seven trunks full of clothes.

Save This Waste of Coal

At Least 50% of Your Heat Goes Up the Flue

In the Nature of Unburned Carbon

In imperfect combustion your fuel is only partly consumed. Usually over half of it is carried up the flue by the draughts, less than 50% of the possible heat is obtained.

20% to 33⅓% Saving by Supplying Superheated Air to the Fuel

The world's greatest scientists have worked for years to save these millions of wasted dollars. NOW—practically complete combustion can be obtained in any firebox by installing one of this century's marvels of scientific achievement—

COMBUSTO
The Fuel Economizer

Easily Attached to Furnaces, Heaters and Ranges

Produces the Following Results:

Complete consumption of ALL the coal; greater heat in the firebox; practically complete consumption of all coal-gases; long blue flames, instead of short yellow ones; consumption of clinkers and cinders, saving ash sifting and prolonging the life of the fire grates and fire bricks; a saving of 20% to 33⅓% less coal required for a greater amount of heat; for cooking, an even fire all over the range; for baking, an even, QUICKER heat throughout the oven; absolute stoppage of escaping gases or odors.

Analysis of coal burned with a Combusto shows only eight-tenths of one per cent of unburned carbon left in the ashes.

Prices: Combustos for Kitchen Ranges, $6 and $10. For Hotel and Restaurant Ranges, $10 and $15. For Hot Water Heaters, $15 to $30. For Furnaces and Sectional Boilers (of 30 pounds steam pressure or less), $20 to $60, according to size.

Guaranteed not for any number of years but for all time, as long as the Furnace, Heater or Range lasts.

EUROPE as well as America has been watching with increased admiration the conquest of the Musical World by the Mason & Hamlin Piano. No other instrument has ever aroused such enthusiasm on the part of musicians. And, remember, this is not the result of chance, extensive advertising or sensational methods. It is due solely to the matchless beauty and permanence of Mason & Hamlin tone.

But whether you seek the world's best or merely the best your means will afford, you will want to visit our store. It will pay you to investigate our methods of doing business, our forty-months credit plan, and our complete stock of standard Pianos, ranging in price from $175 upwards.

On account of our local factory facilities for rebuilding and refinishing, we can make you an unusually liberal allowance for your old piano in part payment toward a new one. The balance you may pay on easy terms.

If you already have an Inner-Player piano investigate our Circulating Library plan for distributing Player rolls. It is both convenient and economical. Should you desire to purchase rolls outright, it will pay you to take advantage of this week's special sale. 3000 new Player rolls of standard makes are being offered for twenty-five cents each.

AND no wonder, because the march of advance in building progress is a quick step. Manufacturers of building materials are constantly on the hump doing old things in a new way and doing new things never done before.

We expect visitors to be surprised at the interesting things unfolded to their gaze at the Building Material Exhibit. When you consider that this array of exhibits is an encyclopedia of modern methods, when you consider that over a hundred manufacturers have put all their eggs in this one basket—then you will understand why this building exhibit saves time and money now and worry afterwards. Look before you build—while you can still change your plans.

Contractors, architects, owners, builders for investment—all of you—will find this great building show absorbing in its interest. It is open every week day; admission is free and you are cordially invited to come any time. Just ask Mr. Friedmann. PLEASURE TRIPS OF FARM BOARDS COSTLY TO STATE

Expenses and Giving Friends Jobs Account for About Quarter of $115,000.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEM LOOSE.

[By a Staff Correspondent.]

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Pleasure jaunts for the fifty-seven members of the state board of agriculture and the Illinois Farmers' institute and positions in the agricultural service for their political friends have cost the state more than one-fourth of the annual appropriations "for the promotion of agriculture and the encouragement of useful education among the farmers."

An analysis of the expenditures of these two agencies disclosed by the legislative efficiency and economy committee reveals the fact.

The annual appropriation for these two boards, this year about $115,000, may be expended by them "as in the opinion of said board will best advance the interests of agriculture, horticulture, manufactures, and the domestic arts."

There is no provision that members and employés of the board shall receive their railroad fare and expenses.

How Money Is Spent.

The report of the efficiency and economy committee, printed exclusively in THE TRIBUNE, dealt only with generalities. A further inquiry into the affairs of the board of agriculture shows:

That the annual meeting at the state fair furnished a week's vacation at the state's expense for the board members and their employé friends.

That positions at the state fair are apportioned among the friends and relatives of the board members.

That a select committee attends the annual meeting of the American Association of Fairs and Expositions in Chicago during the holiday season and the members have all their expenses paid.

Expenses Charged to State.

In the case of the Farmers' institute:

That the directors not only have their expenses paid to an annual meeting of the state institute, but the expenses of all delegates to every county institute are borne by the state.

That many of the speakers at the county institutes are directors, or their friends, who receive money for the work and have their expenses paid.

That in 1912 more than $11,000 was spent in the personal expenses of the board of agriculture, as follows:

Members' expenses	$ 2,688
Mileage	3,224
Hotel bills	3,723
Members' restaurant	770
Livery and automobile hire	938
Total personal expenses	$11,345

Expenditures Not Specified.

In the annual report of the board no attempt in many cases is made to specify for which member the expenses were incurred. Such items as "Thomas S. Marshall, member's expense, $39.45," and "Frank H. Mares, member's expense, $85.45," are supplemented by such as "Leland hotel members' hotel bill, $125.40"; "St. Nicholas hotel, members' bill, $321.85"; "Chicago and Alton railroad, mileage book, $40"; "C. B. Kenney, livery, $12," with no indication for which member or employé they were incurred.

Joab Goodall, representing the Twenty-fifth congressional district, and living in Marion, has received for many years a salary of $83 a month as general superintendent of the fair, although the fair lasts only one week. Items in the annual report, such as "Joab Goodall, forage, $321.85," were declared by attachés of the board's office to mean that he had sold the board hay from his own farm.

Relatives Given Good Jobs.

J. T. Montgomery Jr., son of the president of the board, until recently was employed in its office at a monthly salary of $100. F. E. Culp, related to one of the directors, was employed in the swine department of the fair, and a relative of the chief clerk also found a place.

The pay roll of the fair shows that men from every county in the state were brought to Springfield for one week at fair time, their expenses paid, at the suggestion of members of the board, whose friends or political acquaintances they were.

A deputy state fire marshal named Bogardus was on the state fair pay roll last year as a special policeman. A members' restaurant at the fair grounds is maintained at a cost of $1.61 for each meal served.

In the case of the Farmers' institute the appropriation for the expenses of members and speakers is usually about $12,000 a year. In addition an item of about $7,500 for the support of county farmers' institutes is for the most part expended in paying the salaries and expenses of speakers and delegates to the institutes.

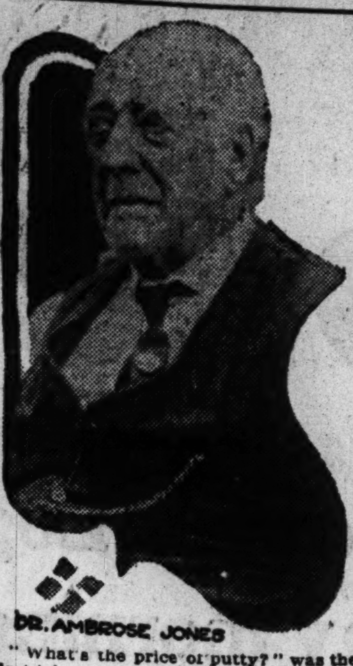
Friends Receive Benefit.

The following list of speakers employed by the state institute is indicative of the manner in which this fund is administered to friends of the directors:

	Amt. recd.
A. N. Abbott, former speaker of house	$255.13
B. T. Abbott, relative of above, Morrison	240.00
Mrs. E. W. Burroughs, wife of director, Edwardsville	90.00
J. B. Burrows, director, Decatur	40.00
Mrs. J. M. Clarke, wife of director, Chicago	18.00
A. P. Grout, director, Winchester	380.00
H. S. Harer, politician, Taylorville	40.00
Frank I. Mann, brother-in-law of Congressman, Gilman	495.00
Mrs. H. A. McKeene, wife of board's secretary	197.00
C. C. Pervier, member of legislature	259.00

Nearly one-fourth of the cost of the county institutes was paid by the state and in one-half of the counties the state paid more than half of the cost.

"Putty Has Riz" First Wire Here.



DR. AMBROSE JONES

"What's the price of putty?" was the first telegraphic message ever dispatched in Chicago. The sending instrument, operated by Ambrose Jones, M. D.—now in his 95th year—was located in THE TRIBUNE office. The receiving instrument, in charge of his assistant, was in the original Sherman house, from whence was flashed the brief answer. "Putty has riz."

The wire connecting the two instruments was strung over the top of "Long John" Wentworth's store and caused him some concern for the safety of his building.

Dr. Jones, who now lives in Delton, Wis., graduated from Rush Medical college in March, 1848. He is the oldest living alumnus of that institution.

GIRLS' LOW WAGE IN MINNESOTA $8

New Board Makes $9 and $8.50 Minimum in Offices of Leading Cities.

FINDINGS OF INQUIRY.

BY THE REV. JOHN A. RYAN.
[St. Paul seminary, St. Paul, Minn.]

Some of the difficulties of deciding upon a wage which will be acceptable to both employer and employé are here described by Father Ryan, author of "A Living Wage" and one of the foremost authorities of this country on minimum wage legislation.

New York, Nov. 21.—The minimum wage law of Minnesota authorizes the minimum wage commission to establish advisory boards to assist in the task of determining living wages for women and minors. Accordingly, the commission set up early in the present year three such boards one for the mercantile and one for the manufacturing concerns in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and one for both these industries in Duluth.

Each of the three boards was composed of employers' and employés' representatives in equal numbers with a third group representing the general public.

The efforts of advisory boards to ascertain the minimum cost of living for working girls brought out many interesting and instructive facts. In the mercantile board the subcommittee on clothing reported three estimates, averaging $2.20. Four of the six members of the subcommittee of the manufacturing board agreed upon $1.92 a week as the proper minimum cost of clothing.

It was generally recognized that this item of expenditure is somewhat higher for store girls than for those employed in factories. In the matter of miscellaneous expenses, such as car fare, health, vacation, laundry, etc. the subcommittee of the mercantile board reported a minimum cost of $1.81 a week, while the subcommittee of the manufacturing board agreed upon $1.90.

The task of determining the minimum cost of board and lodging was considerably more difficult. This was due mainly to two causes: First, the fact that the cheapest boarding houses were limited in number; and, second, the question whether all girls may reasonably be required to live two in a room.

$4.80 a Week for Two.

The majority of the mercantile board finally decided an allowance of $4.80 per week would provide good accommodations for all willing to live two in a room, and probably would cover a sufficient number of single room places to care for those who had reasonable grounds for declining the double room arrangement. The majority of the manufacturing board adopted the recommendation of $4.75 per week.

The employer members of the mercantile board proposed that the minimum wage recommended be $7 per week. They defended this proposal on the ground that $7 a week is a decent living wage for all girls living at home, and that these constitute the great majority.

To the objection that a minimum adjusted to this standard would leave the girls who were "adrift" insufficiently protected, whereas the law was enacted especially for their protection, the employers responded that the number of girls living away from home who were getting less than living wages even now was so small that they should be provided for otherwise than by establishing a wage so high as to cause great hardship not only to employers but to employés who would not be able to earn the legal minimum.

The majority of the mercantile board refused to entertain this novel interpretation of a living wage. At the final meeting the board adopted by a majority of eleven to nine a recommendation of $8.65 per week as the minimum cost of living for experienced adult women workers. Of this sum $2 was allowed for clothing, $4.80 for board and lodging, and $1.85 for miscellaneous expenses.

$8.75 for Factory Board.

By a majority of nine to four, the manufacturing board recommended a wage of $8.75 per week. In this estimate the weekly cost of clothing was put at $1.92, board and lodging at $4.75, and miscellaneous expenses at $2.08. The Duluth board adopted by a vote of 16 to 2 a recommendation of $8.50 per week.

In Minnesota the commission may establish minimum wages without the intervention of any advisory board, and even when it has set up such a board it may reject the recommendations of the latter and proceed to fix whatever rates it pleases. These optional and purely advisory...

Thus the estimate of the Duluth board was $8.50, and of the manufacturing board of the twin cities $8.75, yet the cost of living in Duluth is apparently slightly higher than in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Railroads and Street Lines Take Heavy Toll in Reported Accidents in Chicago.

George Gillmore of 3625 South Fifth avenue incurred a fracture of the skull early yesterday when struck by a Pennsylvania railroad train at Ninety-fifth street. He was taken to the South Chicago hospital, where physicians say he may live.

Tony Nugani of 13322 Calumet avenue was killed when he fell from an Illinois Central suburban train at the Kensington avenue station and rolled down a fifteen foot embankment.

A coroner's jury returned an open verdict at the inquest into the death of William Finfrock, president of the Finfrock company, dealers in solder, who was struck by a street car in front of 214 South State street on Friday evening.

Capt. James O'Donnell Storen of the Maxwell street station injured his foot and ankle when he fell from a Kedzie avenue car. Robert Oates, 15 years old, of 1055 West Huron street, was stealing a ride on the rear of a wagon when an Elston avenue car bumped into the back of the vehicle at the east approach of the Randolph street bridge and crushed his legs. He was taken to the Iroquois hospital.

William Zinker of 6211 South Wabash avenue was found unconscious on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad tracks at Twelfth street. It is believed he was struck by a switch engine.

Boat Released in River.

The grain steamer Calumet, owned by the Inter-Lake Steamship company of Buffalo, N. Y., which had been wedged in the river at the west approach of the Lake street bridge, was released early yesterday.

"WEIL" SMOKELESS
FIREBOX
BOILER
STANDS THE TEST

Chicago's Smoke Inspection Department has forbidden the installation of any heating plant of more than 1,200 square feet steam radiation unless heated by some type of smokeless boiler.

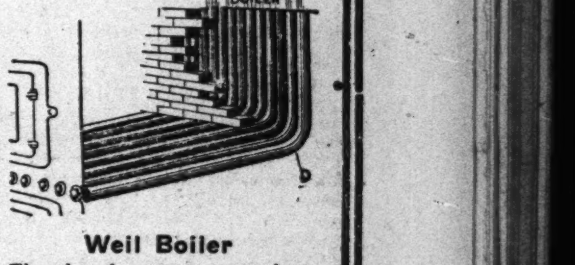
Since this order was issued the Weil Smokeless Firebox Boiler has been officially approved as complying fully with these requirements.

AND THE WEIL BOILER WILL STAND YOUR TEST

There is solid merit and science in every rivet of the Weil Smokeless Firebox Boiler; but there is one feature in particular that manifests the brilliance of American invention. It is an exclusive feature, which makes the Weil far superior to any other boiler.

The Water Grate in the Weil Boiler is so devised as to take care of the necessary expansion and contraction without wear or tear on the joints.

These two diagrams show how the Weil differs from any other boiler in this important particular.



Ordinary Boiler
When the fire is built on the grate (A), the water tubes, which compose the grate, expand and exert pressure on the thread in the header (B). As the expansion must come in a straight tube (A) between the rigid header (B) and the rigid front of the boiler (C), it is severe.
This wear and tear is increased by the fact that the threaded joint of the tube in the header is directly exposed to the fire.
When any thread in the header gives way, the whole header must be taken out.

Weil Boiler
The tubes of a water grate are bent at an angle which admits of ample expansion and contraction (at D) without strain on the joints. If there were any strain on a joint in the boiler it could stand it infinitely better than the header joint in any other boiler for two reasons:
1. The joints are not threaded, but expanded into the boiler.
2. The fire is not near the joints, but separated from it by a brick wall.
Any tube may be easily taken out and replaced without interfering with any of the others.

The unique construction of the water tube grate of the Weil Boiler has one other highly advantageous effect. As each tube has individual and unrestricted outlet and inlet to the boiler, there is a free circulation of water from the tubes into the boiler. This steams up quickly, and prevents the water boiling in the tubes, which do not get clogged with scale.

There are many other technical perfections in the Weil Smokeless Firebox Boiler which are peculiar to it. All of them work for greater efficiency, make possible the burning of the cheapest grades of soft coal and insure marvelous economy of operation.

Give us an opportunity to prove to you that the Weil Smokeless Firebox Boiler is the best boiler money can buy.

SEEK 2 MEN WITH BURNS 3 HOURS BEFORE HE DIED

HUNT TWO WOMEN, TOO.

Nicholas T. Burns, the wealthy ship chandler found dead on Friday morning in front of 4948 Sheridan road, was seen three hours before at Thomas Chamales' Green Mill Gardens, at Lawrence avenue and Broadway. Two men were with him at the time. One of Burns' companions remarked in a joking manner to one of the check clerks as he asked for his coat on their way out:

"I thought I fired you last night."

The three men, evidently out on a lark, adjusted their coats, passed the doorman, and stepped out into the night.

Last night the doorman went to the morgue and confirmed his suspicions that the man was one of the party the night before. He prepared a careful description of the other two men for the police, who are now working on this new clew to apprehend the persons with Burns on the auto ride which it is supposed culminated in his death.

Seek Two Women, Too.

Detectives were assigned yesterday to search for two women believed to have been with Burns at the time of his death. The women are thought to be the same two who paid a mysterious visit to Klaner's undertaking rooms in North Clark street, viewed the body, and left hurriedly without revealing their identity. One of them was overheard to remark, "Yes." It is the theory of the police that the women are residents or inmates of some house near Sheridan road, where the body was found. It is possible, they say, that they may have murdered Burns, with robbery as the motive.

Often Away Nights.

Burns was a rope and marine supply manufacturer at 722 Roberts street. He was a bachelor and lived at 2312 Seminary avenue with his widowed sister, Mrs. Sarah Kearns. He was a heavy drinker at times and often spent several nights at a time away from home. For this reason his relatives did not begin a search for him until yesterday, when his nephew, William Kearns, visited the undertaking rooms and positively identified the body.

Following the identification the police began to trace Burns' movements on the night prior to his death. Mrs. Kearns said he had about $100 when he left home Thursday evening. Dr. Thomas F. Crowe of 1121 North State street, the family physician, who attended him Thursday evening and who scouts the murder theory, said he did not have much money with him at the time.

The reports that Burns had been killed by a dose of the deadly cyanide of potassium may have been due to the fact that a medicine he had been in the habit of taking, iodide of potassium, creates a condition and odor similar to that of cyanide of potassium.

Suffering with Heart Trouble.

"Mr. Burns had been a steady drinker for years," said Dr. Crowe. "He was suffering from valvular heart trouble and uremic poisoning. For the last three months his condition had been serious, and I warned him to be careful in his drinking. The alcohol would not leave his system and would poison him. It took only a few drinks to intoxicate him in this condition.

"He was about 47 years old and was suffering from Bright's disease. He came to see me on Thursday evening at about 8 o'clock. He had been drinking and his system was poisoned. I treated him and gave him some iodide of potassium, which caused him to sweat out the poison. He went into a back room and lay down and felt better after a while.

Going for Drinks.

"I wanted him to stay longer, but he insisted on going. He felt very much better after the treatment and said he was going to the Green Mill garden and have a few drinks. I advised him to go home, but he was obstinate and left at about 10 o'clock.

"I do not think he was murdered. I think he died a natural death, just as I had been expecting for several months. The presence of iodide of potassium in his stomach would provoke a condition and odor which would cause the coroner's physician to think he had taken cyanide of potassium."

A chemical analysis of the viscera by William McNally, coroner's chemist, established the suspicion that death was due to cyanide poisoning.

Nephew Suspects Murder.

William Kearns, the nephew, insisted he believed his uncle was murdered.

"We never knew much about his business," said Mr. Kearns. "He may have been worth $10,000 or he may have been worth $100,000. He went out almost every evening and drank considerably. He usually carried about $50 or $60 with him when he visited the cafés and saloons. He liked to have a good time and was pretty much of a man about town. I've often heard him speak of some women friends over on Sheridan road or in the vicinity there somewhere. I never heard their names and don't know their addresses. There were several places he visited.

"The way I figure it out is that he probably went there and they all went for a joy ride. The fact that his hat was found two blocks away would lead one to suppose that it might have been blown off in an automobile or something. His companions may have stopped the car and thrown him out. They may have robbed him. He had only 17 cents when found, and I know he had more than that when he left home. He may have been poisoned or he may have died a natural death, but it is my theory there was some one with him. I think it was the same two women who visited the undertaking rooms. The bruises on his face could have been made by some one dragging him to the sidewalk and throwing his body face downward."

Visited Widow, Is Report.

Mrs. Kearns also said she had heard her brother speak of knowing a person or persons on Sheridan road. Capt. Cudmore of the Summerdale station said he had received information that Mr. Burns frequently visited a widow living near where the body was found.

"That's ridiculous," said Mrs. Kearns. "I never heard my brother speak of a widow."

Thomas J. Kelly, who rents an office in the rope and marine supply house, said he had known Mr. Burns for thirty years.

"Mr. Burns owned real estate of considerable value in Chicago," said Mr. Kelly. "He has a big plant out here, but looked upon this business more as a side line. He gave much of his time to his real estate holdings. I never knew him to worry much about anything. It was not his nature to worry over anything. He seemed to be always in good health as far as I could see. When I saw him last three or four days ago he was in an unusually happy frame of mind."

Sleuths on Trail.

Detectives Sergeants Stephen Barry and Freeman Steel of the detective bureau were assigned to trace Mr. Burns' movements in detail between the time he left his sister's residence at 10 o'clock Thursday evening and when his body was found at 1:30 o'clock Friday morning by a passing automobilist. Others were assigned to question every one in the neighborhood where the body was found to ascertain who Mr. Burns' mysterious friends were.

Coroner Hoffman set the inquest for Dec. 4 in order to give the police time to make a thorough investigation and summon witnesses who may establish the real cause of death

THIS "TRIBUNE" ADLET LIVES FOR TWELVE YEARS.

Physical Culture School Receives Request for Booklet Advertised More Than Decade Ago.

What is the life of an advertisement? This little story sheds some light on the question.

Twelve years ago last October a three line business personal advertisement was inserted in THE TRIBUNE by a downtown physical culture school. It carried an offer to send a booklet dealing with the advantages of physical training in building up the body. The announcement brought a number of replies. The edition of the booklet was distributed. Other advertising matter was prepared and the booklet campaign forgotten long since.

Yesterday the manager of the physical culture school received a request for one of the booklets from Ishpeming, Mich., as announced in the little TRIBUNE adlet of twelve years ago.

The paper containing the advertisement had been filed away. It was "put into circulation" recently during a house cleaning.

GIRL MUST FACE COURT.

Myrtle Anderson, Taken to Cabarets by Woman, Will Be Before Judge Pinckney Tomorrow.

Myrtle Anderson, 17 years old, of 4104 West Twenty-second street, who was taken to cabarets by Mrs. Grace Martin, will be arraigned before Judge Pinckney in the Juvenile court tomorrow. Mrs. Martin, who formerly lived at 4050 West Twenty-second street, was fined $25 and costs on a charge of disorderly conduct Nov. 19 by Judge Fry when she admitted having induced the girl to accompany her to the cabarets. She was arrested on complaint of Mrs. Mary Anderson, the girl's mother.

Mrs. Martin swore out a warrant for the arrest of her husband, Jack Martin, on a charge of nonsupport and he will be given a hearing before Judge Fry Dec. 1.

It was erroneously reported Mrs. Grace Martin lived at 4327 St. Lawrence avenue. That is the home of Martin's mother, Mrs. Clara E. E. Martin, who was concerned in no way in the proceedings.

FIVE HELD AS SHOPLIFTERS.

Men Caught by Police Stealing Goods in Loop Department Stores.

Five men were arrested yesterday in the different loop department stores on charges of shoplifting. They are: Charles Jackson of 52 East Illinois street, George Fogarty of 1120 East Forty-second place, Benjamin Hilliard of 1309 La Salle street, Frank Baker of 3538 Indiana avenue, and Robert Morrison of 3826 Rhodes avenue.

BONNIE HAME

MRS. JAMES F. PRESNELL

The new home for working mothers and their children established by the Bonnie Hame association will be opened about Dec. 1 at 826 Dakin street. The organization was formed in 1911 for the purpose of equipping homes in various neighborhoods for widowed mothers of refinement and education who, being forced to work, find themselves unable to give their children the proper attention and training. The plan, it is hoped, will prevent many families from being separated.

Furniture vans backed up to the Dakin street home yesterday and members of the association, led by Mrs. James F. Presnell, were busy getting things in order for the house warming on Thanksgiving. At that time each member who attends will be asked to bring some article for decorating the home or adding to its comfort and coziness. There are eighteen rooms in the house, most of which will be used as sleeping quarters. There will be a nursery, and while their mothers are at work the children will receive all the comforts of home.

The home is expected to be self-sustaining after the initial cost of equipment.

BRANDEIS SEES BOOM NOW HERE

Even Has Good Word for His Old Enemies, the Trusts.

'THEY HAVE REFORMED'

Prosperity based upon sound business achievement is the portion predicted for the United States by Louis D. Brandeis in his address yesterday to the judges of the Circuit and Superior courts at a luncheon given by Judge Hugo Pam.

"The general easing of money is one of the strongest influences in reviving business," said Mr. Brandeis. "With the opening of the federal reserve banks interest rates have been dropping. The history of business in this country proves that as soon as money in the banks is offered liberally for commercial purposes hoarded money comes from its hiding place and increases the flow of currency into general circulation. This is what is happening now.

Big Business Active.

"Big business is making plans for increased activity. The opening of some of the larger steel mills is but an indication of this. The leather industry in New England is working on rush orders at advanced prices. Other industries are in the same position. The eyes of the world will be on the United States during the next twelve months.

"I believe the large corporations are today doing everything in their power to obey the law. They have found it does not pay to do otherwise. I think the trust situation in this country is now well in hand."

Praises Rail Rate Raise.

In an interview Mr. Brandeis said the railways will now become large customers of American manufacturers.

"For the last year and a half," said the man who told the railways how to save $1,000,000 a day, "the railways have not had the money to purchase even the necessary supplies for their ordinary needs. With the increased revenue from higher passenger and freight rates the railways will first look to their depleted stocks of supplies and doubtless will be larger purchasers from American manufacturers during the next six months."

Lawyers Regain Prestige.

Mr. Brandeis told the judges the legal profession is regaining influence.

"It is foolish to attempt to deny that the lawyer as a class lost the respect of his community. The lowest ebb in this decline came about two years ago."

Mr. Brandeis spoke last night at the Ashland club in the interest of the Zionist movement for the Jews in Palestine. He will speak this morning at Sinai temple and tonight at Douglas park auditorium.

"The European war has upset the plans for the Zionist movement," he said. "The 200 colonies now located in Zion are in distress and require immediate relief. My visit to Chicago is to raise $20,000 to help in this relief work."

SUIT INVOLVES HYPNOTIC ART

Relatives of Mrs. Laflin-Jones Sought Methods of Opponents.

CRUELTY IS CHARGED.

New York, Nov. 21.—[Special.]—That the relatives of Mrs. Hester A. Laflin Jones, who is suing Gardner D. Jones, her second husband, for divorce and the recovery of $50,000, intended to combat hypnotism with hypnotism at the trial, was revealed today in the report of a referee in the proceedings which was filed in the Supreme court.

Most of the papers in the report were sealed, but one which revealed the intention to introduce novel testimony at the trial was left open and attached to it was a letter from Mrs. Jones' sister-in-law, Mrs. Louis E. Laflin, to Mrs. Jones' attorney, David Wallace.

Mrs. Jones, former widow of Albert S. Laflin, a wealthy Chicago business man, has a city house at Park avenue and Sixty-first street and a country home on Shelter Island, L. I. In 1911 she was married to Jones.

Says Husband Extorted Money.

In her suit Mrs. Jones told of alleged extortion of large sums of money by her husband, and also alleged that he obtained between 400 and 500 shares of Diamond Match company stock. She named a woman, whose identity has been withheld.

In addition Mrs. Jones told a story of alleged cruelty, declaring that her husband beat her, and on one occasion plunged a hunting knife into her up to the hilt and then left her with the knife sticking in her body.

She also alleged that her husband terrorized her, and that he "obtained mental domination" over her. It is in connection with this charge that the sister-in-law wrote.

Fighting Fire with Fire.

"Dr. Carey, our personal friend and physician," she wrote in anticipation of Mrs. Jones' taking the witness stand, "says she might be hypnotized there, and then the undoubted evidence might help the case and those fighting for her freedom. But he feels strongly as I do, that not once more must she come under his (Jones') blighting influence. My sister suggested fighting hypnotism with hypnotism.

"She must be saved from herself and from that brute. He hypnotized her out of each shock to her ideals and poisoned her against her best friends and family."

ALLEGED KIDNAPER GIVES UP

George Karmachukas Said to Have Stolen 14 Year Old Girl.

NEGRO LINGUIST IS AN IMPOSTOR

"Prof. David Itchoch," Accused by Girl, Confesses He Is No Jew.

EVEN FOOLED RABBIS.

Frederick Douglas Berger, a negro, who is reputed to be the "master" of twenty-two languages, and who for the last few years has posed as "Prof. David Ben Itchoch," a colored Jew, confessed in Judge McDonald's court yesterday that he is an impostor. Berger is under indictment on a serious charge preferred by Clara Merrywether, a 14 year old colored girl of 4050 South Federal street.

The negro was so clever with his knowledge of foreign languages and the customs of foreign nations that he successfully fooled many prominent Jews and rabbis in Chicago. Among those he convinced he was of Jewish faith was Julius Rosenwald.

Learned Languages in Mines.

"I learned the languages working in the coal mines in Iowa," said Berger. "I worked with foreigners, studying and learning their speech, idioms, ways, and actions. I studied the customs of foreign lands and peoples in books at night. After a few years it all came to me like music. I read in the Chicago papers about the Black Hand bombs in 1901 and came to Chicago to try to get a job on the detective force. I wanted to get at the bottom of the Black Hand feuds. I learned to speak Italian, Spanish, and French with that in view. I was refused a job because I am black.

"So I gave that up and for the last few years mingled with the Jews on the west side. I wanted to learn Hebrew. I wanted to find a girl for a wife, one that was dark and could teach me Hebrew. I found her in the Merrywether girl, but I was too hasty.

Not Born in Palestine.

"My parents were not born in Palestine, as I said. They were born in the south and moved to Buxton, Ia. Their names are John Thomas Berger and Mrs. Susan Berger, and they live at 1822 Elm street in Des Moines. At one time I was sent to the reform school at Eldora, Ia. My stories about travel in Russia, Africa, and Europe are false. For a time I was associated with Rabbi Horace, a negro born in the south, who has a colored congregation and worships in the Jewish faith, although he does not know the Hebrew language."

Berger was arrested last year and his case dragged from one court to another until it came to the attention of Judge McDonald, who suspected the man was an impostor and had his stories investigated. Berger's confession followed.

Split Interest Inquiry Tomorrow.

The grand jury investigation into the "split interest," said to have been paid by the defunct Lorimer La Salle Street Trust and Savings bank to city treasury officials in return for city funds placed in the Lorimer bank, will be resumed tomorrow.

INSURANCE MAN FOUND IN RIVER

Henry Hezel of Chicago May Have Been Robbed and Slain.

LONG WALKS HIS HOBBY

A story which appeared in THE TRIBUNE led to the identification yesterday of the body of a man found last Wednesday morning in the Desplaines river four miles south of Joliet.

Miss Anna Hezel of 5641 South Green street identified the body as that of her father, Henry Hezel, 56 years old, an insurance collector, who had been missing since Tuesday.

It is the theory of the Joliet police that Hezel was attacked, beaten, and robbed in Chicago by some tramps, who placed the body in a freight car on the Rock Island road and then threw it into the river as the train passed over the bridge a short distance from where the body was found.

His Pockets Rifled.

The body was found Wednesday morning by George Garver, who was hunting muskrats along the river banks. The body lay close to the shore, near Brandon's bridge. There were bruises on the head, the clothes had been torn and stripped of every mark of identification. The pockets had been rifled.

Coroner William C. Wunderlich of Will county took charge of the body and sent a detailed description of the man to the bureau of identification in Chicago on Thursday.

In the meantime members of the family had notified the police that Mr. Hezel was missing and furnished them with a detailed description of him, which tallied in every respect with that sent by Coroner Wunderlich. Despite this fact, the police apparently did nothing, however, for it was not until yesterday when Coroner Wunderlich saw the story in THE TRIBUNE that he notified members of the family by long distance telephone.

Friend Suspects Robbery.

Miss Anna Hezel and H. J. Dentzman of 6248 Throop street, chancellor commander of Concordia lodge 83, Knights of Pythias, of which Mr. Hezel was a member, went to Joliet and made identification positive.

"There was water in the lungs," Mr. Dentzman said, "and we believe he was drowned. Whether he was pushed into the water of whether he fell in we don't know.

"What made us suspect robbery was the fact that everything was missing from his pockets. Members of the family don't know how much money he had with him when he left home on Tuesday. It probably was only a small sum, though. He did have a watch and chain with a Knights of Pythias charm, a lodge button in his coat lapel, and one or two other emblems. He was also known to have carried a check book and some papers. Not one of these was on the body when it was found.

He Took Long Walks.

"It was the theory of the Joliet authorities that he was robbed and beaten and thrown from a Rock Island train as it crossed the bridge a few hundred yards north of where the body was found.

"I think Mr. Hezel was walking along the river bank. He was a great walker and often went on long hikes. The Desplaines river was his favorite haunt. He had walked down the river to Joliet on several previous occasions."

Dead When Thrown in River?

Both Coroner Wunderlich and his assistant, Eugene Harris, asserted there was practically no water in the lungs and that Hezel was dead when thrown into the water. The coroner said it was his opinion Mr. Hezel was walking near the Rock Island freight yards, not far from his home, when he was attacked and robbed. The assailants, he believes, placed the body in a car and dumped it off the bridge after passing Joliet.

An inquest already had been held when the body was identified. The verdict was drowning by unknown causes. Coroner Wunderlich explained the verdict by saying it was merely a formality. The finding of bodies in the river occurs so frequently, he explained, that inquests over them were just more or less matters of routine.

Mr. Hezel is survived by four daughters and three sons. The funeral will be held next Tuesday under the auspices of Concordia lodge. Burial will be at Forest Home cemetery.

67 HOLDUPS; RECORD WEEK

Operations of "Stickup" Men, Added to 300 Robberies, Make Total Loss $70,000.

SMALL THIEVES BUSY.

Saloonkeeper Believed Fatally Wounded Resisting Bandits; Many Women Are Victims.

BULLETIN.

Andrew Temple, a saloonkeeper, 3568 Archer avenue, was shot in the abdomen and probably fatally wounded by one of five men who attempted to rob him and eight patrons late last night. The robbers entered the saloon and Temple resisted. He was taken to a hospital by the Brighton Park police.

Sixty-seven holdup robberies is the record in Chicago for the last week. This, the police say, is the greatest number of "stickups" for one week in the history of the department.

There also were more than 300 burglaries of flats, stores, and residences. Pickpockets, confidence men, and bogus check swindlers were unusually active, their operations amounting to about $3,000. Automobile thieves stole fifty cars, nearly all of which were found abandoned after they were stripped of accessories.

Detectives who have access to the department records say the week's toll levied by the criminal classes in Chicago is more than $70,000. This amount, it is said, is not extraordinary.

Open Season Starts.

At this season of the year, say the police, crime is always at its highest. The only thing out of the ordinary in the last week's record from a sleuth's viewpoint is the large number of "stickups." Otherwise it was a "quiet week."

Of the sixty-seven "holdups" one-third of the victims were saloonkeepers. They, with customers, were thrust into iceboxes, while the bandits searched for valuables.

One of these "holdups" was committed yesterday afternoon at 1445 South Sangamon street. The saloon is a short distance from the Maxwell street station. Bernard Lipkin, the proprietor, and eight customers were in the place when four robbers entered.

Eight revolvers were leveled at Lipkin and the customers. They raised their hands and at command of one of the robbers entered the icebox. Three hundred and fifty dollars in currency and $300 in checks were taken from the cash register.

Rob Dry Goods Store.

An hour later another bandit gang held up Wilner's dry goods store at 2359 West Ohio street. Three men carrying revolvers entered while a son of the owner was the only person in the store. They got $60. Young Wilner was bound and gagged and locked in a rear room so that he could not pursue them. They were seen to enter an automobile that was waiting for them half a block away.

George Merrit of 2231 Washington boulevard, a driver employed by the Crescent Jacket, Apron, and Towel company at 2215 West Madison street, was dragged from his wagon in Leavitt street, near Monroe, and robbed of $26 by three armed men, who later escaped down an alley.

Leo Johnson, 19 years old, of 2270 Archer avenue told the police he was attacked and robbed of $12 by Joseph Donovan, 17 years old, and another youth at Twenty-second and Canal street. Donovan was arrested, but denied the charge.

Takes Her Pocketbook.

A pickpocket opened the handbag of Miss Susanne Luitink of 6328 Cottage Grove avenue while she was standing on the elevated platform at Fifth avenue and Randolph street and stole a pocketbook containing $3 and a cameo brooch worth $25.

J. B. Smith of Indian Valley, Va., told the police he met a man named William Murphy when he arrived in Chicago Friday night. He accompanied Murphy to 153 West Ontario street, he said, where Murphy, another man, and a woman overpowered him and stole $11 from him.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi of 2222 Washington boulevard told the police that while he and his wife were talking in the dining room early yesterday a man crawled in a front window and stole $100 worth of jewelry and surgical instruments.

Indian Woman Robbed.

Mrs. Littlebear, an Indian, 1940 North Clark street, reported that an attempt had been made to steal her pocketbook in the Gem theater, 412 South State street. Although she caught the man in the act, the manager of the theater refused to call a policeman, she asserted.

She went to the police station, got a detective, and went back to the theater. When they arrived the man had disappeared.

Three men entered the delicatessen store of Meyer Hutchinsky, 3123 Milwaukee avenue, and, pointing revolvers at Hutchinsky, emptied the cash register of $6.

A negro watched M. A. Losee and his family leave their apartment building at 3767 Grand boulevard in the afternoon. After they drove away in an automobile the negro gained entrance to their apartment, which is on the first floor.

Fifteen minutes later the Losee family returned home. Losee drove the car around to the rear. He went up the back porch, and there saw a negro peering through the half opened back door. The negro carried a revolver, and, pointing it at Losee, threatened to shoot him if he made an outcry. The negro then fled. Uncut diamonds valued at $650 were missing.

Fall in Yard Kills Man.

David Grant was found dead early yesterday in front of his residence, 9139 Brandon avenue, South Chicago. His neck and left leg had been broken, supposedly by a fall from the elevated sidewalk which connects the front door of his home with the sidewalk.

SLEUTHS ADMIT NOT REPORTING KNOWN CROOKS

But Men Trapped in Graft Expose Deny They Took Protection Money.

SCHUETTLER IS SURPRISED.

Testimony of Detective Sergeants Harry E. Power and Michael J. Mulvey revealing laxity and inefficiency in the detective bureau yesterday amazed the members of the civil service trial board. Power and Mulvey took the stand to deny that they had received protection money from investigators for the crime commission—Ben Kendall, a reporter for THE TRIBUNE; John P. Mortimer, and Paul R. Claussen.

At the conclusion of the case persons in close touch with civil service matters expressed the view that the detectives could not escape dismissal. The trial board probably will announce its decision Monday.

During the course of the trial, Commissioner John J. Flynn elicited the fact that one of the important provisions of the police reorganization ordinance is systematically violated at the detective bureau. The ordinance requires the detectives to make a report to the commanding officers whenever they see suspicious characters.

Admits Negligence.

"Have you ever made any reports of having seen well known crooks?" asked Mr. Flynn.

"No, I haven't," replied Mulvey.

"I have never seen any suspicious persons hanging around," volunteered Power.

"I know forty places in the loop district where I could go right now and point out crooks," said Commissioner Flynn.

"Well, we're not supposed to make reports unless we have got evidence to insure a conviction," explained Mulvey.

Schuettler Surprised.

Assistant Chief Schuettler also expressed surprise at Mulvey's statement.

It appeared from the evidence that members of the detective force regulate their activities just about as they please.

"In all other city departments field workers, from section foremen to health officers have to make a daily report as to what they are doing," said a member of the trial board later in the day. "It seems to be different with detectives."

A Sleuth's Day's Work.

The commissioners were especially interested in the amount of work performed by Detectives Mulvey and Power on Sept. 30. According to their own statements, this was their "time schedule":

8 a. m.—Reported at the detective bureau.

9 a. m.—Left the bureau, stopped in a jewelry store, and started for Foley's saloon at Thirty-first and State streets.

11:45 a. m.—Met Kendall, Mortimer, and Claussen at Foley's.

12:15 p. m.—Tried to see a man at Thirty-first and Cottage Grove.

12:30 p. m.—Went to a restaurant at Thirty-first and Indiana.

4:45 p. m.—Mulvey reported at the bureau.

"Full Day's Work?" He Asks.

"Is that a full day's work for two detectives?" asked Maj. James Miles, who was conducting the prosecution for the civil service commission.

The detectives said they had never heard that Foley's saloon was reputed to be a hangout for doubtful characters. They admitted they had made no report with regard to the investigators, although they became suspicious of their actions.

Mulvey and Power denied they had received money from the investigators, and asserted the testimony before the crime commission was a "frameup." Power referred to their accusers as "three lying little rats."

Sleuths in Conference.

Evidence was introduced with respect to a conference about which no information has hitherto been given out. It appeared that Ald. Charles E. Merriam, chairman of the crime commission, and Fletcher Dobyns, attorney for the commission, summoned Power and Mulvey into Mr. Dobyn's office shortly after the investigators had given their testimony.

"They wanted me to work for the commission and tell them about thieves and graft," said Power. "I said I would be glad to show up these three lying little rats that were appropriating the commission's money for their own use and making charges against innocent policemen. I said I wanted justice."

"I told you that the charges amounted to criminal conspiracy, and I advised you not to say anything about your case," explained Mr. Dobyns, speaking to Power. "I said I had no power to grant you immunity but I asked you if you had any information about policemen accepting graft."

Knows Nothing of Graft.

"And I said I didn't know about any graft, and if I did it was my duty to report it to you," interposed Power.

The detectives explained that they were consorting with the pseudo "dips" in the hope of getting information about stolen furs and diamonds.

"Why, for two years," said Mulvey, "I stood on duty at the corner of Sixty-third and Halsted streets, and during all that time there was not a single complaint of anybody having his pocket picked."

It was at this place the investigators said Mulvey hung around while they pretended to pick pockets.

ALL OR NOTHING, LEGISLATIVE CRY OF REPUBLICANS

G. O. P. Senators in Conference Declare Against Any Alliance with Democrats.

Republican senators will organize the Illinois senate as Republicans—with the aid of Senator George W. Harris, holdover Progressive—or not at all.

They will present a solid front for a complete program of advanced legislation and put it through, if they can control the upper branch of the general assembly. If the Democrats secure the assistance of Senator Harris and organize the senate, the Republican position will be that of a unanimous minority fighting all the winter at Springfield for the legislation which is to be prepared before the session opens.

There will be no bipartisan combination with any faction or element of the Democrats, looking toward a split-up of the committees between the two parties, and it is to be an "all or nothing" policy so far as the Republicans are concerned.

Decide on Plan at Conference.

This was determined definitely and unanimously yesterday at a conference of seventeen of the twenty-five Republicans who will sit in the next senate, held at the Hamilton club. Senator Willett H. Cornwell presided and Senator Samuel A. Ettelson was the secretary. Each of the eight absentees reported his acquiescence in the proposed harmony arrangement.

The following committee of seven was authorized to initiate the preparation of a complete series of measures along advanced legislative lines which will be submitted to a Republican conference to be held in Springfield the Tuesday night before the session meets in January.

Edward C. Curtis of Kankakee.
Morton D. Hull of Chicago.
Richard J. Barr of Joliet.
Samuel A. Ettelson of Chicago.
Willett H. Cornwell of Chicago.
John Dailey of Peoria.
E. S. Smith of Springfield.

Constitutional Convention First.

First and foremost in this program, which is destined to have the unanimous Republican support during the winter, will be the rapid fire adoption of a joint resolution calling for the submission to the people of a call for a constitutional convention. Practically all of the senators and senators-elect indicated a desire to place the constitutional convention proposition at the head of the list. Friends of the movement considered that the greatest impetus yet recorded in behalf of the convention was given by the tone of the conference.

The committee of seven is not to apportion chairmanships, nor is it to discuss legislative patronage. The main chance, from the Republican standpoint, is to perfect a line of legislation which will place the party in condition to win the state in 1916.

These Subjects Scheduled.

The list of subjects tentatively suggested to the committee of seven by the participants in the conference embraced the following:

Constitutional convention.
Corrupt practices.
Good roads.
Amendment to the public utilities act.
Amendment of the amending clause.
Nonpartisan election of judges.
Nonpartisan election of local officials.
Amendment to the revenue laws.
Strengthening of the civil service acts.
Short ballot.
Prevention of live stock diseases.
Consolidation of state boards and departments.

Additional subjects are to be suggested to the committee of seven, which will begin its meetings some time this week, with the intention of having a thoroughgoing plan of legislative action ready for submission to the full Republican side when it assembles in Springfield.

Quietus on "Dicker" Talk.

Senators who spoke at the conference put a sharp quietus upon the gossip that there might be a dicker arranged between certain Republicans and certain Democrats whereby the chairmanships and the senatorial patronage could be controlled through a bipartisan combination.

Senator Barr of Joliet, whose name had been mentioned in this connection in some quarters, was the first to be heard. He asserted strenuously that he shall not be a party to any such combination and that the Republican side must fight as a compact and effective organization.

"Tribune" Editorial Done in Cake.

THE TWILIGHT OF THE KINGS FROM NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY
DINING CAR DEPARTMENT

Here's the sequel to the much copied and now famous "The Twilight of the Kings" editorial in THE TRIBUNE of Sunday, Aug 2.

B. A. Johnson, editor of the Lumber World Review, discarded his regulation magazine cover and substituted THE TRIBUNE editorial, which rebuked the "pietistic kings" of Europe and forecast the triumph of republicanism.

Yesterday the magazine cover and the editorial came back to Mr. Johnson. Hazen J. Titus of 118 East Forty-ninth street, head of the dining car department of the Northern Pacific-Chicago and Northwestern railroads, had made a sixty-five pound fruit cake, covered with a half inch layer of rich icing, and sent it to Mr. Johnson. On the top of the cake there was a raised section, with the cover of the Lumber World Review and "The Twilight of the Kings" editorial worked in raised sugar letters.

"I am going to give a 'prosperity' dinner on New Year's day," Mr. Johnson said, "and invite 500 of my friends to help me eat the cake."

URGES REFORMS IN THE SCHOOLS

Mrs. Young Favors Courses Holding Greater Interest for Children.

WANTS MORE VARIETY.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 21.—Radical reform in the elementary education of children was advocated by Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of the Chicago public schools, in an address today at the convention here of the National League of Compulsory Education. She declared that unless new methods are adopted children cannot be held in school.

"On the day when we can present a variety of subjects in the school that will appeal to varying types of children, then we will hold their interest and keep them off the streets," said Mrs. Young. "We have got to have something that appeals to the child mind, something that will awaken it. There are three types of children, one of which is the restless type. That is the type the public school loses and we lose those children because we do not give them something to do.

Urges Varying School Courses.

"This idea that children are all alike until a certain period is a mistake. We have got to offer them more than one line of work and show them things which are positively useful in the child eye. In time the strictly academic course may give way to the industrial course. And I would change other courses of study when necessary. I would give boys and girls earlier in life such subjects as physics, chemistry, and modern languages."

Mrs. Young asserted that with truant officers placing children in school the teachers should at all times do their educational and sociological share in keeping them there and obviating recurrences of truancy or absence.

W. L. Bodine Re-elected President.

William L. Bodine of Chicago was unanimously reëlected to a fourth term as president of the league. John B. Quinn of St. Louis was elected secretary, and T. P. Twiggs of Detroit, treasurer.

The report of the committee on resolutions favoring expansion of Juvenile court laws so that parents as well as children could be put on probation in a centralized family court was adopted. The dependency laws were condemned as superficial because there was not sufficient provision for closer supervision of adopted children placed in homes when paroled from institutions.

Uniform marriage and divorce laws were favored. It was decided that a permanent census bureau should be in every bureau of compulsory education, and that every child who secured an age and school certificate to go to work should be able to at least read and write simple sentences in the English language.

SULLIVAN PAID OUT $8,295.

Recent Candidate for Senator from Illinois Files Expenses, of Campaign He Made.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Roger C. Sullivan, recent candidate for United States senator from Illinois, filed his final expense statement with the secretary of the senate today. Sullivan spent $8,295 in his effort to win the senatorship, according to his report, and received from friends only $105 in contributions. Sullivan is the first of the Illinois candidates to file the after-election statement demanded by the law.

TEACH CHILDREN TO PLAY.

Albert C. Ferguson Says Work and Pastime Should Be Coördinated.

"Children should be taught how to play, and their work and play should be coördinated," said Albert C. Ferguson, president of the Illinois Commercial federation, in an address yesterday before the Vocational Art and Industrial federation convention in the Hotel Sherman.

TEACHERS SEEK MINIMUM WAGE, STATE PENSIONS

Chicago Body Also Advocates Free Books and Return to Two Mill Tax.

A minimum wage for school teachers, a longer term of office, and state-wide teachers' pensions are some of the things which the Chicago division of the Illinois State Teachers' association is asking for. The teachers met yesterday in the Congress hotel and issued a "declaration of principles."

The declaration reads as follows:

"We call the attention of those charged with looking after the welfare of our state to the further needs of our schools.

"We trust that the 2 mill tax may be restored. To attract and hold the highest grade of talent, a longer term of office must be encouraged and a minimum wage established for teachers.

Oppose Teaching Caste.

"While we favor the establishment of vocational training, we protest against making it the means of creating a caste or class distinction in education. Let all vocational or technical training be a part of the present public school system.

"We strongly approve of the work done by the school survey. We urge upon all teachers a hearty coöperation in this work.

"We favor the extension of the compulsory school age from 14 to 16 years.

"We favor a state-wide pension for teachers, provided that the securing of such pension law is not made the entering wedge for changing the principles underlying the pension systems already established and in force in this state.

Free Text Books Favored.

"We advocate a system of free text books in Illinois.

"Believing that our state has outgrown a constitution which prevents the proper expression of the real spirit of progress in Illinois, we favor the calling of a convention to revise the state constitution.

"We note with pleasure the evident growth in public approval and use of simpler spelling, and we heartily commend the initiative and activity of the committee on simplified spelling of the state association."

W. R. Hatfield was elected president, Ida M. Fursman, vice president; Mary A. Donaghue, secretary; A. W. Evans, treasurer, and Miss Elizabeth Buehmann, member of the executive committee.

Frat Order Indorsed.

A resolution sustaining and indorsing the action of the school management committee and Mrs. Ella Flagg Young in suppressing fraternities and sororities in public schools was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the board of directors of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and the Parent-Teachers' association.

WOMEN WILL SEEK LAWS FOR WELFARE OF CHILDREN.

HARMONY REIGNS IN MOOSE CLUB

Differences Are Settled and Ickes and Wife Return to Membership.

ALL DEBTS TO BE PAID.

Differences in the Progressive club of 19 West Jackson street yesterday were all settled amicably. The debts were paid, and the members who had withdrawn from the club returned.

Harold Ickes and Mrs. Ickes and Mrs. Charles W. Kayser of Wheaton, Ill., were among those who were restored to full membership.

Agreement at Luncheon.

The harmonious understanding was reached at a luncheon in the clubrooms when the executive committee met with the new president, George E. Fernald.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank was appointed chairman of the entertainment committee. Several members volunteered to secure pledges in order to relieve all financial worry in the future. More than $700 was raised for the payment of debts which are "now all covered with promises" by members.

Plan "Defeat Dinner."

"Each ward committee will work to secure new members and the Progressive club is to continue," said Mr. Fernald. "Mrs. Fairbank intends to send a wire to Col. Theodore Roosevelt this afternoon to be present at a large 'defeat dinner' which we have planned to have in the Hotel La Salle soon. There will be another dinner at the club on Dec. 10.

The members of the executive board at the "harmony" luncheon besides the president were: Miss Marion Drake, Mrs. George Welles, Mrs. Annetta Fitch, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Charles E. Kawin, Robert F. Kolb, and J. R. Edwards.

PIPE FIRES MAN'S CLOTHING.

Edward Harty, 80 Years Old, Dies at Hospital as Result of Burns.

A coroner's jury at an inquest into the death of Edward Harty, 80 years old, employed at the Mercy hospital, found that death had resulted from burns sustained when he placed a lighted pipe in his pocket. Harty was found by George Austin, another employé of the hospital, with his clothing in flames in the corridor of the building.

LASHING IS GIVEN TO PROGRESSIVES BY AMOS PINCHOT

Former Worker for Third Party Says It Has Failed of Purpose Intended.

New York, Nov. 21.—[Special.]—"The Progressive program had something of everything in it, from the care of babies to the building of a birch bark canoe. Yet it contained little which dealt with the actual problems of the United States in any except the most superficial manner."

So writes Amos Pinchot, a pioneer in the Roosevelt movement of 1912, in an article in the Masses entitled "The Failure of the Progressive Pary." He says that under blind leadership the party departed from its ideals and followed a middle of the road course, permitted itself to be used for pro-trust propaganda my George W. Perkins, with the approval of Col. Roosevelt, degenerated from principles to platitudes, became a personal faction, and died, never to be revived "until a new and more social conception of politics dawns upon the leaders."

Party of Radical Wing.

In Mr. Pinchot's opinion a new party has no place in the United States unless it represents radicalism. He says:

"The Progressive party should either have undertaken to go deeply and intelligently into the causes of the economic trouble which threaten the peace of society, as the liberal parties in England, France, and Germany have done, or it should have kept its fingers out of the pie.

"It did neither. It contented itself with a series of unobjectionable reforms, supposedly adapted to vote getting from all quarters. Carrying a withered and decidedly suspicious looking olive branch to labor and capital, and to democracy and oligarchy alike, it pleaded for universal approval. This plea was rejected.

Sudden Change in Program.

"As time went on the rank and file of the Progressive party began to realize that the line of march had mysteriously changed. They had supposed the gist of the situation in America—the cause of our social unrest and agitation—was the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few people. They had believed that the advance of democracy in this country means the establishment of a more just distribution of wealth and power and that this was the fundamental consideration upon which the new party was founded.

"But within a few months from the party's birth all this was altered. A new atmosphere began to pervade its councils. The fight against privilege was abandoned so far a national headquarters was concerned. In the disputes between the consumer and the trusts, between labor and the trusts, and between capital and labor, headquarters either kept silent or else took the side of capital.

"In the meantime an extensive pamphlet propaganda in defense of the trusts was organized by headquarters which included bitter denunciation of every one inside or outside of the party who would not admit that monopoly was the people's best friend.

"In 1913 Mr. Roosevelt published his autobiography, containing a further and exceedingly influential defense of the monopoly principle in general and of the steel corporation in particular."

G. O. P. ON FENCE IN MAYOR FIGHT

Will Fight if Field Against Democrats Is Not Split Up Too Much.

EYES ON ALD. MERRIAM.

Republican organization leaders are now agreed upon a policy of postponing consideration of the mayoralty until after Christmas. It is too soon to get down to individuals, they believe, and there is plenty of time to give to the possibility of an independent or a third party candidate.

This was indicated yesterday by County Chairman David F. Matchett. Mr. Matchett said the county committee had not discussed any candidates, except in the most informal manner, and that no plans, even tentative, had been adopted looking forward to the spring campaign. The executive committee is to meet on Wednesday, but it is doubtful that anything touching the coming city fight will be considered then.

Eye on Independents.

"It is entirely too early to groom a Republican candidate," Chairman Matchett said. "We are satisfied we can elect a Republican mayor in April, if there is not an independent candidate in the field. We do not, of course, know what will develop along that line. If it is to be a straight fight between the Republicans and the Democrats, the Republican organization will be prepared to consider the strong list of available Republicans and support a candidate who can win beyond a doubt."

The Republicans, undoubtedly, await the disposition of the Progressive party organization as to the mayoralty, and all the while have an eye out for any intention that Ald. Charles E. Merriam may have to run as an independent candidate and outside any party column.

Brentano a Possibility.

Judge Theodore Brentano's name was suggested strongly as a possible Republican entry. The report was that heavy pressure will be exerted by his friends to secure for him the Republican organization support.

Two Republican candidates are classed as already started for the nomination, Judge Marcus Kavanagh and William Hale Thompson. Many others are in the "mentioned" class.

Roger C. Sullivan is off for the east for a week's post-campaign rest. Many of his friends say he must be figured with as a Democratic contender for the mayoral nomination. Mayor Harrison's political managers are proceeding on the theory that the mayor will announce his own candidacy at the proper time and that he will be nominated without great difficulty.

Circuit Court Clerk John W. Rainey is expected to announce his candidacy within a short time, and City Clerk Francis D. Connery is ready to begin his campaign.

HETTY GREEN HAS BIRTHDAY

Wealthy Woman, Now 80 Years Old, Motors and Attends Party in Her Honor.

New York, Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Mrs. Hetty Green celebrated her eightieth birthday today in the easy fashion she has observed for many years. She was up at her usual hour of 7 o'clock and was about to go to breakfast when her son, Col. E. H. R. Green, came into the home, 7 West Ninetieth street. Each complimented the other on their looks.

"I never felt better in my life," said Mrs. Green to her son.

With Countess Leary, she spent two hours motoring through the parks. In the afternoon Countess Leary gave a birthday luncheon in honor of Mrs. Green, to which twenty-five guests were bidden.

EXPECT MILLION "DRY" PLEDGES

Prohibition Leaders Gratified with Results in the West, Says Hanly.

FLYING SQUAD IS BUSY.

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

A million pledges to national prohibition are expected as the result of the campaign of the Flying Squadron of America, according to J. Frank Hanly of Indianapolis, chairman of the executive committee, who was in Chicago yesterday.

"The Flying Squadron meetings which were scheduled for Chicago yesterday and today," he said, "have been postponed because of the inability of the committee to secure a suitable place in which to meet. Arrangements have now been made for the meetings to be held in the First regiment armory, South Michigan avenue and East Sixteenth street, Jan. 8 to 10. They will be held under the auspices of the Young People's Civic league.

"The Flying Squadron has just returned from the temperance fight in Arizona, Colorado, Washington, and Oregon and everywhere we secured thousands of signers of cards pledging the signers to work for national prohibition and to abandon politically all men or parties which set the liquor traffic above public morals. There were 5,000 cards signed in Duluth, Minn., on our visit as we came through that city."

The Flying Squadron is composed of twenty-two speakers and singers, who are touring 250 cities of the United States and are scheduled to speak and sing every day at some point until June 4.

Politically the speakers are divided among the Democratic, Republican, Progressive, and Prohibition parties and differ in their religious affiliations, but they are united in the one object of the overthrow of the liquor traffic.

To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.
—GEORGE WASHINGTON.

"IN TIME OF PEACE PREPARE FOR WAR."

At the head of the editorial department of THE TRIBUNE there has appeared for several days and will appear for a time an opinion of George Washington.

That it is the opinion of a celebrated man does not establish its truth. Washington was not infallible, and because he believed in military preparedness does not absolve us from the duty of examining the lessons of human experience and the conditions in which we live today to test the soundness of his maxim.

Yet the authority of Washington should weigh with us. Although Mr. Dooley's remark that he is now "only a steel engraving" is unhappily true so far as many of us are concerned, Washington was not only a great man but he was great in a way that gives especial weight to the opinion he expressed upon the value of preparedness. His genius was the genius of moderation. He had a splendid sanity, and when he said that to be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace he was speaking from a ripe experience of war and of peaceful statecraft, with a benignant and disinterested wisdom.

Washington opposed a large standing army, although he had known what it was to lack trained troops. He was a republican, a civilian, and there was nothing of the militarist in his philosophy. Yet we find that those who in our day hold with him and urge the policy of being prepared for war are dubbed "militarists" and enemies of peace by a certain class of enthusiastics.

The war in Europe has given a practical and pressing significance for the usually indifferent American public to the whole problem of war prevention, including most conspicuously that phase of it covered by Washington's maxim. Extreme pacifists declare that the war proves that preparedness for war brought this war about. They hold in effect that Washington was wrong, that, contrary to his view, to be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of destroying peace.

On the other hand, it is maintained that the present war illustrates the truth of Washington's maxim and that it was unpreparedness which precipitated the conflict.

The first view is founded on the theory that by creating armies, either for offense or defense, and by maintaining the military spirit, war finally becomes inevitable. The instinct to use what we have made, to test what we have done, becomes in time irresistible. Europe, like Frankenstein of Shelley's oft quoted tale, having created a monster, finds at last that it defies its creator and becomes its victim.

That there is much truth in this need not be denied. Even its importance as a factor in the present tragedy need not be denied. But the practical problem before a nation is not whether the maintenance of an army and a navy is attended by dangers, but whether it is attended by fewer perils than unpreparedness. Washington, although he lived before the age wherein nations are "armed camps," did not ignore the evil effects of military ambition and did not favor a great military establishment. Yet he evidently believed that to be weak was to invite attack, and to be strong was not necessarily to be bellicose.

To show directly that history sustains Washington is not possible without elaborate reference, and at best the exposition would be open to argument. But when we look over the world of our day it is easy to realize that if the preparedness of some nations does not save them from war, or even precipitates them into war, unpreparedness does not save other nations. China, it is true, is saved from external war. But there are few Americans who would accept its fate for their own country. Unpreparedness did not save England nor France. And unpreparedness never has saved the United States.

On the contrary a higher preparedness of England and France almost certainly would have prevented the present war. Perhaps even a higher degree of preparedness of little Belgium would have prevented it. The weakness of Austria was a perpetual threat of war.

In our own history even moderate preparedness would have saved us from invasion and abject humiliation in 1812, would have checked the rebellion at its inception, would have avoided or made far less costly the Spanish war.

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace." Washington knew that preparedness does not insure peace. He knew that it was not the only means to which a nation should resort to preserve peace. The avoidance of "entangling alliances" was another means he urged. But of the value, if not the imperative necessity, of preparedness in a world which has not yet incorporated the golden rule as a principle of international law, in a world of unequal powers, of incompatible standards, ambitions, and opportunities, no man of Washington's sanity could ever doubt.

The sentimental fallacy of the doctrinaire pacifist who quarrels with Washington's common sense is that passive nations can induce aggressive, expanding, imperial peoples to disarm by offering them an example of defenselessness. Nothing in history or in the present situation of nations justifies this paradox. China's example, our own long standing example, have not induced Germany or Japan to disband their armies, nor England to beach her navy. Only sentimentalists hope that war will be abolished through an example of disarmament offered by nonaggressive peoples. War is avoided through an equilibrium of power, and until the millennium arrives weakness will invite aggression whenever aggression promises profit.

THE REAL LITERATURE OF THE WAR.

The literature of the war has been high sounding and pretentious, if not noble, and the great artists of English have been employed in it. Mr. Shaw has stood upon his head, Mr. Arnold Bennett has been sanely sentimental, Mr. Galsworthy has grieved judicially, and Mr. Chesterton has sparkled about its rights, its wrongs, and its hideousness. But thrilled as we are with these esthetic expressions of emotion, we find the real significance of its horrors in an obscure column in the London Times headed "Killed in Action":

> ELLIOTT.—Killed on Oct. 29, Second Lieut. Philip Lloyd Elliott, Duke of Cornwall's L. I., the second dearly loved son of Mrs. Lloyd Elliott and the late Gilbert Lloyd Elliott, D. C. L. I. and Thirteenth hussars, of Dolhaidd, Carmarthenshire, aged 18 years and 8 months.

Mr. Harold Begbie rails in rhythmic futility about the Teuton mad dog; the poetaster, Mr. Watson, bays vacuously to space in irresolute doggerel; Mr. Eden Phillpotts in iron words writes of sacrifice and of valor, and the great Maeterlinck mourns the plight of the king of the Belgians; but they all leave us cold when we see:

> BAYLEY.—Killed in action on 25th October, George Baird Bayley, second lieutenant, the King's Own Scottish Borderers, aged 20, only son of Isaac F. Bayley, Halls, East Lothian.

Mr. Irvin Cobb's discomforts and the agitation of Mr. Arthur Ruhl at Antwerp; the blithe escapades of Mr. Alexander Powell, flitting saucily via taxicab from field marshal to field marshal; Mr. Bennett's tearful enumeration of the dumdums; all have been vividly related and eagerly assimilated; but here is reams of their graphic narrative in a few lines:

> HARDMAN.—Killed in action Oct. 25-27, Second Lieut. Frederick McMahon Hardman, Royal fusiliers, aged 20, only son of the late Capt. Hardman, the Royal dragoons (who also died for his country, in the Boer war), and of Mrs. Hardman, Castleton, Sherborne, Dorset, and grandson of the late Gen. Sir Thomas McMahon, Bart., C. B.

British critics deplore the ephemeral nature of the literature inspired by the war, and they say that the frigid epic of Sir John French describing the retreat of the allies is thus far its only lasting classic product. Meantime, while waiting for the poets and the historians to enframe its dubious glories in appropriate phrase, we may turn again to the "Killed in Action" column and read among hundreds of others:

> SNEAD-COX.—Killed in action on the 30th October, Geoffrey Philip Joseph Snead-Cox, second lieutenant, First battalion, Royal Welsh fusiliers, second son of J. G. Snead-Cox of Broxwood court, Herefordshire, and 38 Egerton gardens, aged 19. R. I. P.
> SNEAD-COX.—Killed in action on the 28th October, Richard, second lieutenant, Third battalion, Royal Scots, eldest son of J. G. Snead-Cox of Broxwood court, Herefordshire, and 38 Egerton gardens, aged 21. R. I. P.

ARE RACE WARS NECESSARY?

[From the Kansas City Star.]

Ten years ago, when Russia was fighting Japan, the war was represented—by Russian writers—as a contest of Europe against Asia, of the white race against the yellow. It was pointed out that there was inevitable enmity between the two races and that the war was the product of blind forces. Nobody was responsible for it. Fate had decreed it, and that was all that could be said.

Now Japan and Russia are fighting on the same side, and there is a possibility of a formal alliance between them. So, according to Prof. Münsterberg, Russia is an Asiatic power, which is urged into war with Teutonism, representing European culture, by the inexorable decrees of fate.

Races, you understand, are necessarily hostile and they must clash in the long run. Thus speak the learned gentlemen who know all about international situation, and such.

But you will also understand that they don't need to clash unless some energetic forces are set to work for the purpose of producing the ruction. Ten years ago the Russian grand dukes were speculating in Corea. But that wouldn't have been polite to talk about. It sounded much more impressive to talk about inevitable clashes of Aryans and Mongolians.

Teutons and Slavs live peaceably side by side with no thought of clashing until the clash is produced—by the "Russian military party" or the "German military party," depending on the side it is viewed from. At the same time, Japan and Russia are putting crimps in the theory that racial differences must inevitably make them hostile. Also, here is a strongly patriotic German newspaper, the Hamburgische Nachrichten, asserting that there are no insoluble problems between Germany and Russia, but that England must be crushed.

Italians, French, and Germans live side by side in perfect harmony in the Swiss federation. Heaven knows how many peoples of differing races and nationalities have got on fairly well in the Austro-Hungarian empire. You don't necessarily punch a man in the face because he doesn't speak your language.

Fate, as a French writer has said, is the excuse for weak wills.

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY.

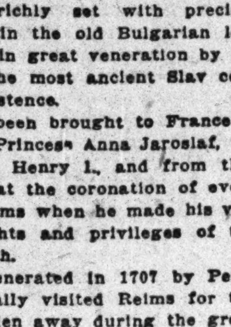
INDIGNATION has been aroused throughout Russia, the Balkans, and the Slav provinces of Austria, by the news of the disappearance of the famous Book of Gospels, principal feature of the treasure of the Cathedral of Reims, and of which it has been impossible to find any trace since the bombardment of that ancient fane by the Germans.

Whether it has perished or has been carried off by looters it is impossible to say.

The Book of Gospels, magnificently bound, and with golden covers richly set with precious stones, was couched in the old Bulgarian language, and was held in great veneration by the entire Slav race as the most ancient Slav copy of the Gospels in existence.

It is said to have been brought to France in the tenth century by Princess Anna Jarosiaf, the Slav consort of King Henry I., and from that time forth was used at the coronation of every king of France at Reims when he made his vow to safeguard the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic church.

The volume was venerated in 1707 by Peter the Great, who specially visited Reims for the purpose, and was hidden away during the great revolution at the end of the eighteenth century, reappearing after the Bourbon restoration in 1815.

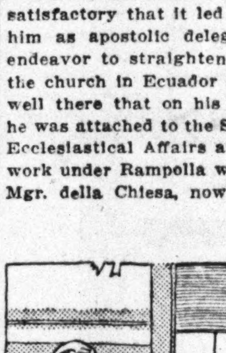


That Cardinal Pietro Gaspari, the new papal secretary of state, should lean towards the allies rather than toward Germany and Austria is only natural, seeing that he spent nineteen years of his life in Paris, where from 1879 to 1898 he was professor of canon law at the Catholic institute.

Moreover, when Gaspari was appointed apostolic delegate to South America, the ceremony of consecrating him titular Archbishop of Cæsarea was celebrated in the great Cathedral of Notre Dame in the French metropolis by the late Cardinal Richard, archbishop of Paris.

During the time he spent in the French capital he was much more than a teacher of canon law. For he enjoyed in a marked degree the confidence and favor of Cardinal Rampolla, was on terms of the greatest intimacy with Cardinal Ferrata when the latter was secretary of the papal embassy in Paris, and when he afterward returned to the banks of the Seine as nuncio, and was intrusted with much delicate and difficult work, alike ecclesiastical and diplomatic, by Rampolla when the latter was secretary of state.

His diplomatic work, indeed, in Paris was so satisfactory that it led Cardinal Rampolla to send him as apostolic delegate to South America, to endeavor to straighten out the tangled affairs of the church in Ecuador and in Peru, and he did so well there that on his return, by way of reward, he was attached to the Secretariat of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs at Rome, where most of his work under Rampolla was in close association with Mgr. della Chiesa, now Benedict XV.



Although the name of the Duchesse de Valentinois, who has been distinguishing herself as one of the ladies of the Red Cross society of France and as a nurse at the military hospital of Beausoleil at Nice, has found no place in the pages of the Almanach de Gotha, which are devoted to the reigning house of Monaco, yet she is the only daughter of the crown prince of Monaco, and has been duly recognized by the ruler of Monaco as his grandchild and in the line of succession to the throne.

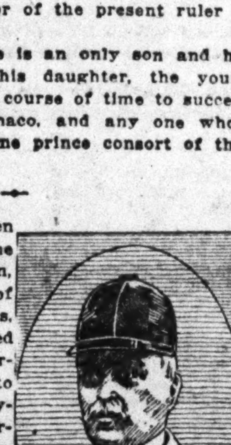
Her mother was a Mme. Louvet, who lived for a time with the crown prince, but with whom she eventually had many violent quarrels concerning the custody of this the only daughter of this left handed union.

For the crown prince developed a great affection for his daughter, who is a beautiful girl, and objected to her being reared under the influence of her mother and among the entourage of the latter's family.

The French tribunals were invoked in the matter by the woman in vain, and ultimately she surrendered all her rights to her daughter, who since that time has been brought up entirely under the care of her father and grandfather.

The name of Valentinois and the ducal title connected therewith were once owned by the lovely Diane de Poictiers and are honors of French origin, having been bestowed by King Louis XIV. of France upon Honore II., Prince of Monaco, an ancestor of the present ruler of the principality.

As the crown prince is an only son and has no children besides this daughter, the young duchess is destined in course of time to succeed to the throne of Monaco, and any one whom she marries will become prince consort of that principality.



Sir Marteine Owen Lloyd in announcing the death of his only son, Capt. Marteine Lloyd of the Grenadier guards, from wounds sustained while fighting the Germans in France, refers to himself as "the twenty-fourth lord of the barony of Kemes, in Pembrokeshire, and as the only holder of the title of Lord Marcher still in existence."

It is perfectly true that Sir Marteine, whose baronetcy only dates from 1863, has been exercising the right by tenure of the twenty-fourth Lord Marcher of the barony of Kemes. As his father and grandfather did before him, he might have gone on enjoying this privilege forever, no one caring to go to the trouble of contesting his usurpation, had he not put forward on the occasion of the coronation of King Edward a demand to precede as Lord Marcher all baronets in the coronation procession, following immediately in the wake of the barons, and to bear the king's silver harp.

This pretension was referred to the Court of Claims, presided over by the lord high chancellor, which after careful investigation decided that he had not established by evidence his right to the heirship of the former Lord Marchers of the barony of Kemes, and deprived him of the honor.

LIVER—ORGAN OF MYSTERY.

THE liver is the longest known and the least known large organ in the human body. These two facts associate themselves together rather naturally. The organ is so large, so easily observed at autopsy, so much in evidence when the bodies of the lower animals are opened up that men began to notice it, observe it, and write about it in the days of little knowledge.

Knowing so little they began to speculate. In consequence the liver got into religion, poetry, speculative philosophy, into nearly every field except the field of cold facts. Sometimes it is a mistake to know about things before one is ready to comprehend them.

The liver is on the right upper side of the abdomen. Its front edge comes about an inch below the border of the ribs. This region is known as the right hypochondriac region, because the lower portion of the liver occupies it. It crosses over the middle line and occupies a small part of the corresponding territory on the left side.

In the adult the liver weighs three to four pounds—almost one-fortieth of the entire weight of the body. Its bulk is about ninety-fice cubic inches.

The blood which is collected from the stomach and intestines is gathered into large veins, and these pour into one large vein called the portal vein, which carries the blood from the digestive organs to the liver. Here this vein breaks up into very small capillaries. Every liver cell is surrounded by small capillaries and every small capillary is walled by liver cells.

Obviously the work of the liver cells has to do with the blood that has just come from the digestive organs. One of the functions is to take from the portal blood the bile just absorbed from the intestines.

This is done because the blood has no work for bile to do. In fact, bile in the blood would do great harm, and therefore there must be some provision to remove it. In the second place the intestines need bile, and there must be some provision to take it from where it would do great harm and conduct it to the intestines where it can do good.

However, the really important function of the liver is not the formation of bile. The important work has to do with the conversion of food into forms which can be used by the tissue. The bile ducts begin as tiny tubes between liver cells. These run out of the liver lobules and join with other ducts, which finally form one large duct by which the bile is carried to the intestines.

The blood, having been acted upon by the liver cells, is gathered up by the veins and emptied into a large vein, by which it is carried to the heart—the organ which pumps it everywhere throughout the body.

A cream separator has one inlet and two outlets. Milk is poured into the inlet. The machine separates the milk into two parts. Out of one spout cream pours; out of the other, skim milk.

The liver has one inlet and two outlets. Into one the blood fresh from the intestines is poured. Down the bile trough into the intestine pours the bile. Into the blood stream from out the liver substance pour the digestive products, ready to be used by the body cells.

The anatomy of the liver has been known since any anatomy was known. Anatomy is geography. The liver is bounded on the north by one structure, on the south by other structures, and so on. However, its anatomy is unstable; as unstable as European boundary lines. The shape of the liver is largely determined by external influences. A tightly corseted woman has a liver with one shape; a Falstaff, one with another shape. Before birth the liver of a baby spreads all over the abdomen and constitutes one-tenth of the total weight. A ten pound baby at birth has a liver weighing one-half of a pound. A mature man weighing 160 pounds has a liver which weighs nearly four pounds. One-tenth the total weight, one-twentieth, and one-fortieth, respectively.

The microscopic anatomy or histology of the liver has been known since the microscope was perfected. Practically no new discovery in the minute anatomy of the liver has been made in the last quarter of a century. Nobody has put any rivers on that map.

When we come to the work of the liver we enter the field of romance. Theology, law, history, literature, as well as medicine, bear the imprint of the romancer retailing the story of the liver. It bulked so large that at its doors has been laid the responsibility for nearly every impulse in human experience. Acts had to be explained—the liver. The great, prominent, bulky liver had to be explained—the acts.

Science was not ready to come forward with the facts. Reasons must be had. The result: a flood of speculation, theorizing, outright fancy. Possibly here and there a truth was put on. Quite certainly the composite contained more fancy than truth.

At the present time a few facts are known. There is no question but that the next ten years will see many discoveries in the field of liver physiology. It is not possible that so large an organ could have so little work to do as that which we now know about.

We know that it secretes bile. That much is certain. But the present evidence is that bile is the least serviceable of all the digestive juices. It is not to be compared with the gastric juice, or the pancreatic, or the secretion of the intestinal glands.

As a digestant it seems to be about on a par with the saliva. It stimulates the intestinal muscles to work and the other glands to secrete, and thus indirectly it helps digestion more than by direct action.

This is what Minor calls the pantry function of the liver. The food, having been cooked in the kitchen—the stomach—and being on the way to the dining room—the intestines—is flavored in the pantry by the bile and pancreatic juice.

Some might not agree with Minor in calling the intestines the dining room. The actual eaters are the cells of the body, and the food in the intestines, while in the process of preparation, is still far from being ready to be eaten by the body cells. Helping in this further preparation is the most important work that the liver has to do. It is also the field in which the discoveries of the next few years are to be made.

The recognized functions of the liver in this field are its work in making sugar and starch ready for use and its effect on albumins. The liver has the power of converting ordinary sugars into a special form of sugar, glycogen, and storing up in its cells the excess of glycogen. It has the power of converting glycogen into other forms of sugar when the body needs them.

This function of the liver has much to do with the production of energy and the making of heat, as well as with the general nourishment of the body.

It is now well known that after the gastric juice has converted a piece of beef steak into peptones it is necessary that somewhere in the body these peptones be converted into amino acids, and some of them finally into urea. With this work the liver has to do.

Probably in time it will be found that the liver has several other functions. In the ordinary work of keeping well, as done by the ordinary, every day citizen, the only function of the liver that is given any thought is its bile secreting function. And most of the accepted ideas on that subject are wrong.

I am sure the idea is general that a man should take something to "touch up his liver" occasionally; that if he has malaria he will not get much effect from quinine until he has stimulated his liver or got the bile out of his system.

To do this it is customary to take calomel. One old time patient of mine, who periodically appeared for his horse medicine, always called for a teaspoonful of calomel. He did not get it, but he got a horse dose.

There is no proof that calomel stimulates the secretion of bile, or gets the bile out of the system, or touches the liver. Any laxative which empties the intestines and rids the blood vessels of the abdominal cavity of several pints of water will promote the absorption of quinine or anything else which is subsequently taken. For this purpose calomel is about as good as any other laxative, but no better.

To empty completely the large intestine from beginning to end it may be as good as castor oil, but it is no better. To drain quarts of fluid from the overfull structures of the abdomen it may be as good as a dose of salts, but it is no better.

People who lead very sedentary lives are prone to become bilious periodically. Delicious food, tastily prepared, tempts them to overindulgence. At the same time the cost of such food ties them to long hours to the desk to earn the price.

Eating is addition; out of doors exercise is subtraction. Day by day subtraction hangs a little behind addition, until after a period the addition column is so much the longer that we develop a condition which we call biliousness.

Nobody knows the chemistry of biliousness. The term is loosely applied. The old custom was to take a dose of calomel or a course of calomel for it. The theory was that the liver needed touching.

There is no proof that in biliousness the liver needs touching or that calomel will touch. The need is to decrease addition and to increase subtraction. Upton Sinclair would stop addition. Better poised people than he have advocated the same policy, though they burn out the flues by a day or two of starvation rather than a week or two of it.

The sensible course would be, instead of the fit and start, jerky method to change the amount eaten daily so as to bring it in relation to the amount of work done.

Another group advocates preventing biliousness by increasing subtraction. Some tell us to ride horseback every day. Others inveigle us into games of golf, or maybe it's bowling, or billiards, or skating. I do not know, but I doubt if any prizefighter in training every sufferer from biliousness or any football player during the season, or any baseball player between April and October.

The man who is bilious gets relief by taking a laxative. For this purpose calomel is as good as salts and castor oil, and no better. What he is suffering from is not torpid liver, but from food poisoning of a certain sort.

What is needed in the ordinary case is merely to empty the lower canal and to drain some of the water out of the abdominal vessels, whereupon the liver and the other organs will do the rest. For this purpose a saline is both more prompt and better than calomel.

In some of the ordinary cases of so-called biliousness some food remnants further up the intestinal canal are responsible for the poisoning. In these cases, it is claimed, salines do not cure the biliousness; it does not get well until the liver has been touched.

What is needed is complete emptying of the large intestine. For this calomel is better than salts, but castor oil is better than calomel. The need is to "touch" the cœcum, not the liver.

In a certain sense glycosuria, a form of diabetes, is a form of biliousness. The person affected habitually eats more starch and sugar than his liver can handle. His addition goes ahead of his subtraction. Presently the kidneys lend a hand, and subtraction is taken up through the urine.

Testing the liver for its ability to handle sugar and starch is not at all a difficult matter. Any doctor can do it. It is but little trouble. It consists in taking three and one-third ounces of levulose [a form of sugar] or one ounce of galactose [another form of sugar] on an empty stomach and then examining the urine for sugar. The tests should be six in number, beginning with the urine passed two hours after the sugar has been eaten. The examination should be of the urin passed two, four, six, eight, ten, and twelve hours after the sugar has been eaten.

Every "high liver" should have his liver capacity tested once a year. The power of the liver to do its work on albumins can also be tested by the laboratory man. The results of these tests, however, will not be as serviceable as guides to conduct as in the case of the starch and sugar liver functions.

1. The operation is very simple—an incision about half an inch deep, locating and tying off of the vas.

CANNOT BE TERMED A NUISANCE.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Can anything be done to prevent the dumping of boiler dirt and refuse on the vacant premises at the corner of Balmoral avenue and Broadway? We are unable to raise apartment windows on account of the dust due to the unloading of ashes.

A. A. BRAMWELL, 5401 Broadway.

We have been unable by our investigation to determine a nuisance of sufficient extent to justify the intervention of the department. Our inspector states that the material dumped was engine cinders and building refuse, coarse with the fine, so that he does not think much dust would be due to the unloading and that the premises of the complainant showed little evidence of dust accumulations.

TO FIND CONTENTS OF WILL.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—M great-grandfather died about three months ago and left a will. Is it necessary for the attorneys handling the estate to notify the heirs regarding their share, and what time limit is allowed from the time of death to the probating of the will? L. H.

It is the duty of the persons holding this will to present the same to the Supreme court immediately. All of the heirs of the deceased must be notified of the probate proceedings, in order that they may have a chance to appear in the estate. By going to the office of the clerk of the Probate court you can learn if this will has been probated, and by giving the name of the deceased and the approximate date of his death the heir of the estate has the right to examine any will which has been filed with the clerk. When I moved in I was informed of this fact, though no lease was signed. I wish to know if I must give the two weeks' notice, or can I move out at any time and take my property? DAVID MEYER, 4308 West Harrison street.

In the event that you have no written lease and pay rent by the month, in order to move you must give the landlord a notice thirty days before a rent day, and to put you out of possession the landlord must give you a notice in writing thirty days before a rent day. This is the provision of the Illinois law and is binding on you unless when you rented the premises you had a definite agreement with the landlord for a two weeks' notice.

DO NOT FORGET POLAND.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Permit me to express to you my thanks and appreciation for the editorial on Poland, which appeared in last Saturday's issue of THE TRIBUNE, in which the condition of Poland and the sufferings of the Polish people in this terrible war were so accurately presented.

The wrongs perpetrated upon the Belgians have been dwelt upon by the press day after day from the beginning of the war, and, no doubt, they deserve all the sympathy of which the American people are capable and all the assistance that is being given them. But the great majority of Americans are unacquainted with the condition of Poland and the sufferings of the Polish people. It is, therefore, gratifying to the Poles that THE TRIBUNE called attention to that fact. Everybody knows about Louvain, but hardly anybody heard of Kalisz, a city of nearly 40,000 inhabitants in Russian Poland, which was burned by the Germans.

The shelling of the Reims cathedral was decried throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world, but the pillaging of the most sacred shrine of Poland of its priceless treasures of Czenstochow was barely given a mention. Almost the whole of Galicia, which is Austrian Poland, and nearly three times as large as Belgium, was overrun by the Russian, Austrian, and German armies. Russian Poland, which is more than four times as large as Belgium, was overrun by the German army to the gates of Warsaw. The devastation of Poland is just as bad as that of Belgium. But the Belgians have, at least, the satisfaction that they are fighting for their own country. When a Belgian soldier kills a German soldier he knows that he killed a foe who by force invaded his country and brought death and destruction, while the Poles are compelled to fight not only against their own will, but for a cause that is not theirs, but that of their oppressors. And what is worse, they are forced to fight against their own countrymen, often against their own kin—brother against brother, father against son.

There are about 850,000 Poles in the German army. About the same number is in the Austrian army, and about 700,000 in the Russian ranks. In all about 1,500,000. And what are they fighting for? Some are compelled to fight that the heterogeneous empire of the Hapsburgs may not disintegrate; others fight that Russia may continue to hold her sway over the Slav race; while the German Poles are forced to fight that the military autocracy of Prussia may realize their dream of a world empire and spread their culture with their howitzers.

The Belgians have at the least the hope that if the allies win their wrongs will be righted; but for the Poles, judging from past history, there is but little hope in spite of the promises that have been made by the three powers. After the Franco-Prussian war, in which Polish blood soaked the battlefields at Gravelotte, Metz, Sedan, and Paris for Prussia's cause, what benefits did the Poles derive from it? Polish language was excluded from schools and public speeches, their bishops and clergy were imprisoned, 40,000 Poles were expelled from East Prussia, and the notorious land expropriation law and other repressive measures were enacted.

As THE TRIBUNE truly says: "It is not for the Poles to make too much of such hopes. What they are certain of is that Polish blood will run, that Polish wealth will be destroyed, and that whatever flag floats in triumph over stricken fields, it will not be the flag of Poland!" Truly the fate of Poland is most pathetic.

GREAT IS PUBLICITY.

[From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.]

The cause—THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, "the world's greatest newspaper," sent its religious editor to the great convention in behalf of retired preachers at Washington, and during the session printed two or more columns concerning it.

The result—On my first day in the office the following items:

Item 1—At 9 o'clock a whispered suggestion that an estate was going into probate which would bring from $20,000 to $30,000 to the treasury of a certain annual conference.

Item 2—At 11 o'clock a registered letter dropped on my desk after a 2,000 mile journey, containing a draft for $4,000 to be added to a previous draft of $6,000 from a loyal friend of veteran preachers.

Item 3—At 2 o'clock a visit from a Rock River conference preacher to get a form for a will he had been requested to write containing a liberal bequest for the Superannuates' Relief association of the Rock River conference.

Item 4—At 2:10 o'clock a phone call from a lawyer in an Illinois city asking for the legal title to be used in a will for the benefit of the retired preachers of the Rock River conference.

Item 5—An urgent call to meet a gentleman who wanted to exchange a valuable property for a life annuity bond.

Of course, many friends of the veterans collaborated in this fivefold result. But thanks are due and are hereby extended to THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE for suggesting these gifts by giving a faithful account of the great convention.

JEWS SHOULD FAVOR ALLIES Zangwill Says

BY FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE.

[London Correspondent of The Tribune.]

LONDON, Nov. 10.—"Placed between the devil and the deep sea, the Jews of the world must hope for the triumph of the allies and their cause," Israel Zangwill said to THE TRIBUNE correspondent today; "not because they hate Russia less, but because they hate Prussian reaction and militarism more."

I had been saying to the celebrated Anglo-Jewish patriot and author that American Jews balked at the idea of according their moral support to any coalition of belligerents or to any cause with which Russia was identified.

I reminded him that we of the United States ourselves were at this time at loggerheads with czardom in a matter involving inhumanity to Jews in general and our own Jewish citizens in particular. I tried to make Zangwill understand that it was hard for American Jews, even those whose memories did not go back farther than Kishineff and Beiliss, to generate enthusiasm for Russian arms.

Zangwill required no such assurances from me. He has had a stream of correspondence from America raising the same pertinent point, and he gladly embraced the opportunity, he explained, to argue it through the columns of THE TRIBUNE.

"The question for Jews everywhere to consider," he said, "is this: What is the interest of the higher civilization in this war? We should not approach the question purely from the standpoint of Jews by race. We should weigh it unselfishly from the standpoint of Jews by spirit.

"My own convictions are not born of the fact that I am either a Jew by race or an Englishman by birth. They are dictated by the conscience of a man of letters who is in harmony with the universalistic teaching of the Hebrew prophets and who boasts that there is not a chauvinistic corpuscle in all the blood that flows through his veins.

"When the war began I remembered that I had produced, among many other works of art three at least which qualified me to claim for myself utter impartiality.

"During the Boer war I wrote 'The Mantle of Elijah,' an indictment of the British. Oom Paul's secretary, Dr Leyds, told me, when I visited Kruger in his exile in the Riviera, that the numbers of Harper's containing it were read by the Boer soldiers in the field and had cheered their hearts with the thought that there were lovers of justice in England.

"A few years ago I wrote an indictment of everything that kaiserism and Prussian militarism stand for, 'The War God,' played by Sir Herbert Tree, a drama which, in the light of events, was prophetic in detail of this present attempt of Germany to impose its armored domination upon the world.

"My earlier play, 'The Melting Pot,' not unknown in Chicago, was, among other things, a sweeping condemnation of the Russian Pharaoh of today.

"I think, therefore, I can claim to approach the diagnosis of Armageddon in no myopic, bigoted spirit.

"To remind me of Kishineff and ritual murder prosecutions, as you and so many of my correspondents do, is to bring coals to Newcastle. Why, my indictment of Russia, 'The Melting Pot,' is playing in England at this very moment, notwithstanding that Muscovy is our ally. But that very play teaches also reconciliation and forgiveness, and the melting up of the past into a finer future.

"You tell me the hope of liberty and freedom for the Jew in Russia is dim and dismal in the light of the czar's broken promises in the past. You say American Jews fear that Russia's triumph in this war will spell even greater oppression for its Jews than anything they have suffered hitherto. You describe American wonder that liberalized England could have made common cause with reactionary Russia.

"Let me deal with the last point first. It is true that British conceptions of civilization find their exact antithesis in Russia, so far as the bureaucracy is concerned, though certainly not so far as teachers like Tolstoi and Kropotkin (my neighbor in the country, by the way) are concerned.

"However, if we are strange and unnatural political bedfellows, it is the German menace, the military terrorism which Germany has sought to impose upon European mankind, that has compelled Europe to organize and federate for its overthrow.

"Republican France alone was powerless to resist it. It allied itself with despotic Russia in the hope that between them they might roll it back.

"Then a peril which had long been merely continual and military became pan-European and maritime. That compelled England to affiliate itself with those others who were face to face with the German danger.

"I admit that we have sunk below the British level, ethically viewed, in our Russian alliance. But it is Germany which has dragged us down to the plane of brute force.

"The same leveling process has brought all Europe to the lowest strata of uncivilization, war, but war waged for the highest civilization, that is, freedom and political peace.

"When our victory is won, a victory in which Russia will share, another leveling process will inevitably, if not immediately, raise Russia to the strata of its democratic British and French allies. That is the point for Jews to remember.

"Great Britain, to say nothing whatever of France, relieved from the Prussian incubus, will be able to impose upon Russia influence for the emancipation of the Jews.

"Sir Edward Grey has already in a letter to me pledged himself to encourage Russia to emancipate its Jews, and his influence is to be used not simply at the close of the war, as people imagine, but at once.

"Britain's advice to Russia is 'Do it now.' But at the worst the British foreign secretary is bound to be a vital factor in the peace to follow the war.

"There will be another factor which will serve the Jewish cause in the hour of peace. That is the really remarkable enthusiasm with which the czar's Jewish subjects are doing their duty as Russian patriots and soldiers.

"The Russo-American Jews who write denouncing my views should rather denounce the Russian Jews who put my views in practice. But it is clear that those exiles in America have utterly lost touch with the European situation.

"No men in the czar's vast armies are responding more cheerfully or effectively than the Jews to the obligations of war. The Russian Jews seem indeed the only Christians left in Europe.

"Here in London, where the Russo-Jewish immigrants might live in peace, I know of not a few burning with anxiety to enlist in Kitchener's army in order that they may, even in the west, lay down their lives, if necessary, for their native country's cause.

"These things will not be forgotten. They are being remembered in Petrograd already, for I read favor to the Jews between the lines of an imperial ukase, just promulgated, accepting the duma's decision to allow all communities to erect their own schools and colleges without let or hindrance.

"This means that Jews have the unprecedented privilege of establishing and maintaining their own educational institutions. It is no mean concession.

"Do American Jews who think it more natural to espouse the cause of 'enlightened' Prussia than 'barbarous' Russia realize that Jews in Germany suffer under the most obnoxious disabilities?

"There is no geographical pale in Germany, but there is a social pale hardly less odious. In no country in the world is the Jew so completely an outcast as among the military and aristocratic oligarchy which constitutes upper class Germany.

"His name is a by-word which dare not be mentioned in what purports to be polite society. His sons may not aspire to the status fixing rank of an officer in the army or navy. They may not hope for careers in the civil service, unless they disavow the faith of their fathers. They may not join the great student organizations at the universities.

"They may only become second-rate professors of the arts or sciences. Ehrlich of Frankfort is an exception which but proves the rule.

"The kaiser has honored men like Ballin and Rathenau and Simon at the cost of alienating the loyalty and support of 'true Germans' whose souls are aflame with anti-Semitism.

"Dr. Dernburg himself, Germany's chief protagonist in the United States, is a victim of unreasoning Prussian anti-Germanism. Although he was elevated to the colonial secretaryship because of conspicuous merit his downfall was plotted from the moment he took office by the court clique, which could not tolerate even the renegade son of a Jewish father in its exclusive midst.

"Germany has scant claim on its record of its treatment of its own Jews to the sympathy of Jews in America or anywhere else in the world.

"You interrupt and ask: How about France and Dreyfus? Dreyfus was persecuted, but French public sentiment, French love of justice eventually purged him and vindicated him.

"What hope do you think there would be of such a moral regeneration in a community like Berlin, where the best newspaper, because Jewish owned and Jewish edited and waging, prior to the war, an uncompromising and truly Jewish crusade against militarism, is formally barred by decree from entering the home or pocket of a German officer? I refer, of course, to the Berliner Tageblatt.

"I ask American Jews, the Jews who are in your senate and your house of representatives, and in your army and navy, who have been in your diplomatic service and who are always preëminent in all that is best in American life, to remember these things when Count Bernstorff and Prof. Müensterberg flaunt Russia in their faces and ask them how 'good Jews' can sympathize with the allies' cause.

"As to the straightening out of the Jewish situation in Russia, I am fond of quoting a metaphor invented by Herbert Spencer. He said that, if you took a saucepan with a dent in it to be mended the tinker never hammered directly at the bulge, for that would have simply caused a bulge on the other side. He just tapped all around the bulge, flattening out the surface so that the bulge disappeared of itself.

"If the Jews of the world concentrate attention too much on their own particular grievance, especially at a moment when all civilization is in the melting pot, they will find that what is gained in one way is lost in another. Let them help now and always in the general struggle of civilization; let them protest as much against the ill treatment of blacks or Indians or Belgians as against their own ill treatment; let them assist everywhere in the triumph of righteousness and peace, and it will be found one day that the persecution of Jews will have become as unthinkable as the persecution of witches."

The Saddest Day France Ever Had.

BY CAROLYN WILSON.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TRIBUNE.]

PARIS, Nov. 1.—Today has been the saddest day of my life. I have thought these many weeks past that I had seen the accumulation of sorrow, that no more external suffering could bring me more pain than I have already experienced in watching these men and women of France.

But today!

Today it seemed as if all the suffering and all the grief, all the sorrow and heartaches and tenderness and thwarted motherhood, all the wistful courage and trusting faith of the world was in the cemeteries of Paris.

It was All Saints' day. A day set apart piously each year by Parisians to go to the graves of their dead. Usually a day in which a great deal of impersonal grief mingles with some more recent real sorrow. But this year instead of the little children going to put flowers on the tomb of the grandmother they have almost forgotten, it was the old men and the old women who came to put flowers on the graves of the young.

O, if I could only make you see it! Thousands and thousands and thousands of men and women, their arms filled with flowers, their faces grave, their steps slow, their voices hushed, moving about the vast cemeteries, banking flowers by the little black crosses and kneeling on the flower covered mounds in prayer—in desperate prayer.

It seemed to me that they prayed for faith—the faith to still believe. But no tears—almost none. Under their long black veils the widows' eyes were dry.

It was a universal grief. Each mother wept for the dead children of all other mothers. Each wife thought of thousand of other wives who have sorrowed as she has sorrowed. There was no egotism, no selfishness, no hoarding of personal griefs.

They moved in silent crowds through the narrow alleys—bending to read the few words on the black wooden crosses—"Twenty-two years old—thirty years old—nineteen years old."

Two soldiers of the Twenty-ninth regiment, their arms in slings and one limping badly, held little awkwardly tied bunches of asters in their hands. They went down the narrow lines until they came to a grave at the end of an avenue. They placed the flowers man fashion upright against the cross, and giving a stiff military salute turned away.

"A comrade at arms, messieurs?" asked an old man with a medal of the Franco-Prussian war pinned on his coat.

"Oui, monsieur, a comrade—and more—our brother. The littlest one."

Separated only by a narrow trench from the French and the Belgian and the English soldiers is a line of double crosses—simple black ones like the French. And under them lie the German soldiers who have died in our hospitals. And tender, gracious, forgiving women have covered their graves with flowers, too. In death there is no enemy.

The early dusk was falling, and already the cemeteries were emptying. Of the 600,000 who this day have left a flower, said a prayer over their dead, only a few were left by the flower banked graves.

Night fell and left them there, a few straggling members of Paris' army, the great army of mourners.

CONTRAST IN LONDON.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—I feel as if I had come from darkness into sunlight, as if I had come from a house of mourning into a dance hall. It is very exhilarating and a little disconcerting, and sometimes I catch myself thinking it is sacrilegious. It doesn't seem right to see people enjoying themselves so much, especially when I think of the processions of widows and the black, black veils in Paris.

Patriotism

by Robert Herrick

TODAY my eye fell on an article written two or three years ago in which the writer speaks of "the decay of nationalism" and the "growth of international ties," etc. That was the way we were all talking a short year back. Nothing then seemed more remote than another great war. Finance or socialism, we were told, had so broken down the narrow boundaries of European states that governments would not find it possible to conduct wars, even if they had the temerity to get into them. But somebody bungled in Europe and in a few short hours all our dreams of internationalism went up in smoke. All our talk about the fading of national spirit and racial prejudices was seen to be pure speculation—or hot air, as the man on the street puts it.

For a time during the early weeks of the war the English press tried to create the opinion that the only countries really united in support of their governments were Great Britain and France, that Germany and Austria were rent with internal dissensions. That was what England wanted to believe. But the truth gradually filtered through to us from Germany, with the aid of returning Americans who knew the country, and we now see that Germany is more completely fused to a national unit in feeling than any of the contending nations; that it is not a war of the kaiser and his general staff or of militaristic Prussia, as the English poets chirped in chorus, but a patriotic struggle of the whole German people—however wrong headed they may be.

So we shall have to revise our theories of what ought to be by a recognition of what is, and conclude that, in spite of finance and socialism, of inventions and international trade, of peace congresses and cosmopolitanism, nothing is more potent in this twentieth century than the primitive power of nationalism—the strongest force on earth. Loyalty to the state, a readiness to sacrifice all personal happiness to the common cause, which is patriotism, still exists. That is the one great lesson that the war thus far has taught us.

It exists at white heat not only in France and Germany, who have had a quarrel of long standing to settle, but also in England and in half-conscious Russia. Never before in the memory of men have these nations felt themselves so united, have been so vividly conscious of themselves as nations.

Whether that seems to the outside observer wholly a gain for civilization or merely a relapse to savage ideals, it is an established fact, which our glib advocates of internationalism will find it impossible to escape from in their future generalizations.

Doubtless militarists will point to this manifestation of national loyalties as sufficient justification of their pet argument that it takes war to bring out the best character of a people, to weld a nation into an unselfish and heroic unit out of its millions of selfish individuals. It took war, they will say, to settle the Irish question peaceably, to eliminate vodka from Russia, to steady the volatile temperament of the French and break down Germany's rigid caste system, etc.

It is equally true, of course, that the war has put off indefinitely all large programs for social betterment, economic development, and class adjustment. The crop of hates and the exhaustion that will result from this war, however settled, must postpone for a generation or more the accomplishment of many high ideals. For one thing, socialism and the labor cause in general have received body blows from this revival of nationalism that it will take them long to recover from.

But the world is offered fine examples of patriotism. It is worth while realizing the immense importance and the beauty of patriotism. The sacrifices that the French and Germans are making are tremendous—fortunes, futures, lives—all cheerfully surrendered for the sake of the state. The English sacrifices, in spite of their much loud speaking, are not yet so obvious to the world, though doubtless we shall see them in time, if there is no other way out of it.

Patriotism is the expression of a large egotism, but it is the one sure way of destroying all petty personal egotisms when they become too rank. And anything that takes the individual out of his narrow self and thrills him with a universal emotion is ennobling, uplifting. For once in their small lives great masses of men are fired by an ideal that exacts their all and gives in return hardships, sorrow, death.

This feeling has nothing to do with the worthiness of the cause—that is beyond the understanding of the vast majority. "Theirs not to debate." Having been convinced (perhaps by political trickery) that their country demands their sacrifices, they offer their youth to the war gods, open their homes to the wounded, support the needy, maintain their courage and cheerfulness in the face of disasters.

From all accounts that reach us the German brand of patriotism is, if not finest, the most efficient; it sets the standard. The Germans are absolutely united.

The reason for it is that German patriotism did not begin with the war, with enlistment and writing war songs and penning fiery newspaper articles. It began long before the war in building up an efficient state which by industrial legislation looked out for the workingman with compensation and insurance, also in inculcating lessons of respect and love for the German nation.

We need a lot of that sort of patriotism in this country. It is worth while contemplating its results in action. The German apparently not merely fights for his country when he has to, but obeys its laws, respects and admires his government in peace as well as in war. Germans do not graft off their government, as we do. There is none of that disgraceful leakage in public expenditures of city, state, nation, which makes government in this country synonymous with fraud or incompetency. Nor is there that disrespect for law, either the breaking of it by little people or the evasion of it by big people, as with us, nor the selfish use of government to attain merely selfish private ends, which seems to be the American's conception of what government is for.

As compared with the American the German is always a patriot. In Germany "embalmed beef" for the soldier is inconceivable, also the pork barrel habit, pension frauds, Indian frauds, and the many other disgraceful instances of dishonesty in public affairs.

In Germany—also in France and in England—it is a coveted honor to serve the state. Our best American citizens will not make the sacrifice of convenience even to vote regularly, much less give up income or position to serve their country in responsible positions. There are enough and to spare of office seekers in this country—men who want government salaries—but it is difficult to secure the services of able, capable men of high standing in the government departments. "Let the other fellow do it" is a national proverb.

Must it take a great war to shake us out of the sloth of fat individualism in which we Americans have grown rank since the civil war?

A war might reveal to us a shocking condition of selfishness, incompetency, and gross graft that would prove worse than being "unprepared" in the military sense. Moral unpreparedness, lack of real patriotism, is worse than the lack of army or navy or coast defenses.

To many Americans these words themselves will seem unpatriotic—to doubt that in every respect we are the greatest people that ever lived upon the globe, possessing all the primitive virtues besides our national gift of cleverness! Patriotism to that sort of American means shouting for the flag and bragging of his country and its wealth. But patriotism, as Germany is showing the world, whether we admire the form of intense national egotism to which she has turned it in this war, is a real devotion to the interests of the country, a loyal obedience to its laws and pride in its efficiency, in peace as well as in war—not grafting, not living off the state.

Germany is strong today in face of odds, not merely because of her military machine, her preparedness, but because she is a nation of consistent patriots, lovers and workers for their country, ready to make sacrifices in peace as well as in war. America as compared with Germany is weak today not because our army is small, our navy insufficient, our coast defenses weak, but because we as a people have come to look on government as a source of graft or special privilege; because our ablest citizens prefer their ease or private interests to serving the state; because fundamentally we conceive of the state as a contrivance for the selfish satisfaction of our own individualism, not as an embodiment of a national ideal, as an instrument of doing justice to all elements in the nation. What we need is patriotism.

GERMANS DEFY MONROE DOGMA IN LITERATURE

Words of Writers Show The Do Not Respect Yankee Doctrine.

BY T. P. O'CONNOR.

[FOREIGN LETTER TO THE TRIBUNE.]

LONDON, Nov. 12.—One of the curiou results of the war has been in London th extraordinary sale of the leading Ger man books on war and on the relation between Germany and England.

Publishers who had translations of som of these books, including Bernhardi classic, on their shelves for some year were delighted to find that as soon a the war broke out these books began t sell by the hundred thousand.

The publishers were wise enough t bring these volumes out at a cheap price with the result that wherever you trav you are sure to find several people wit their noses stuck into a volume of Bernhardi or Beyerlein's "Jena or Sedan?" One wit summed up the transformatio by saying that you now heard eve Nietzsche discussed by dressmakers in the street cars.

Words of Waltershausen.

The cables have sent us some account of the pronouncements of the Germa ambassador to the United States an Herr Dernberg with regard to the attitud of Germany to the Monroe doctrine When I saw the statements I looked u some of my now large pan-German library, and I came across some passage which did not seem to me to be quite i accord with the statements made b these distinguished gentlemen.

Thus, for instance, in 1898 I find that German writer named Waltershause wrote longingly of the acquisition of port for Germany in the West Indie which belongs to the Danes. He pointe out that Denmark would probably be desirous of getting rid of these islands, a they cost it $150,000 a year, and he goe on to say:

"Should German diplomacy at Copenhagen prove able to overcome the anti Germany resistance of the Danes, no (1898) is the time for us to acquire th islands. The United States is involve with Spain and has no money to spare."

Remarks of Dix.

Some years later, Dix, another Germa writer, returned to the subject, and declared: "That which is valueless to country like Denmark may be of ver considerable value to a world power, pa ticularly if the island gives a footing i a region which gains essentially in importance from the future isthmia canal."

This writer dismisses any claims c America by the statement that "for th moment the Americans have enough o their hands with Cuba and Porto Ric but it would be excessively disagreeabl to them if the Danish colonies were t fall into the hands of another power."

Brazil, it need scarcely be said, fills large part in these pan-German studie "We could easily," Dix says, "have crea ted a domain of our own in Brazil, if th emigration thither had not been for a lon time hindered." He points out also wit satisfaction that at least in one Brazil ian province the German settlers ar massed together and form the majority

Two colonization societies were found ed, one known as the German-Brazilia union, for the purpose of advancing th Germanization of Brazil, and Herr Di meets any difficulties that might arise b saying that "German subjects in Braz can claim the protection of the mothe country for their rights and property, endangered by the frequent political dis turbances of the republic."

Doctrine Not Respected.

These quotations show that the Monroe doctrine has not been quite under stood, and certainly not respected, b some of these German writers. Indee some of them declare that the Monro doctrine no longer prevails.

SHARP DECLINES IN CURB ISSUES

Unlisted Public Utility and Agricultural Implement Stocks Sell Cheaper.

BRITAIN'S TRADE DROPS

Quotations for unlisted stocks traded in on the local curb show marked declines in public utilities common shares as a class, and also in agricultural implements stocks as a class. American Public Utilities common has fallen 10 points since July 30, and Middle West Utilities common 12 points, going from 40 to 28. Standard Gas and Electric common shows a decline of but half a point, but the shares are selling so low that a large change could not be expected. United Light and Railways common dropped from 60 to 40.

The agricultural implement stocks show a decrease of 9 points in Avery common. Emerson-Brantingham common is off 4 points and the preferred 22 points. Moline Plow preferred is off 9 points.

Prices on Unlisted Stocks.

The appended quotations of local unlisted stocks have been prepared by F. M. Zeller & Co.

It is to be distinctly understood that the present market prices are based upon an occasional cash transaction, mostly in small lots, and should not be considered as constituting a normal market. Under such a limited volume of trading it is not unusual that small lots may privately change hands on the same day over a considerable range in price. The quotations:

Erie Earnings.

While the mild weather this fall lowered the demand for anthracite and decreased the gross revenues of the Erie railroad $487,000, or 2.18 per cent, as compared with the same four months' period of 1913 ending Oct. 31, the net revenue, after deduction of operating expenses and taxes, was $525,000, or 10.3 per cent higher.

The lower temperatures now prevailing have stimulated the demand for anthracite, and the November business will compare favorably with November, 1913.

In October the gross revenues decreased $250,000, or 4.9 per cent, but the net revenues increased $232,000, or 20.4 per cent. Total operating expenses and taxes for the month decreased $425,000, or 11.2 per cent. Expenditures decreased 21 per cent, maintenance of equipment increased 1 per cent, traffic expenses decreased 19.9 per cent, and transportation expenses increased 1-7 per cent. General expenses decreased 7.7 per cent.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF BOARD OF TRADE.

Kansas is becoming the stamping ground for wheat buyers from all over the world, according to eastern cash buyers, who have been in the southwest for the last two months. They say the demand for Kansas wheat is absolutely unprecedented. Representatives of export houses from all over this country have been competing for the wheat as fast as it was offered and farmers are able to sell as fast as they feel so inclined. Foreigners have been active competitors with the representatives of domestic concerns for the offerings. A leading cash grain man at Kansas City is authority for the statement he could sell five times as much wheat as he can buy. The only difficulty at present is that cash houses have sold so much they are disposed to take a recess in the selling campaign in order to get the wheat already sold under way.

From all indications the cash trade in oats has been about as big the last two days as any time on the crop. Sales Friday and Saturday were about 2,000,000 bu, mainly for export, and there was also business at Milwaukee for export, about 200,000 bu. For some time buyers have been opposed to paying the advanced prices for cash oats, but strong undertone to the cash market continued, and brokers finally were obliged to pay the advanced prices. Receivers say that while the movement of grain from the country is likely to continue fair on the whole, that a much smaller percentage of it is oats. Many receivers look for a moderate oats movement from now until spring unless ther is a sharp advance, which would change the minds of farmers about selling.

While offerings of wheat were moderate, with some houses not offering any to speak of, there was a fair business and sales here were 250,000 bu. From all points there were reports of a fair demand, Kansas City and Omaha doing a good business. Exporters are now buying direct at Omaha and Kansas City, taking the weights and grades of those markets, and it is understood they have been outbidding local houses for the wheat in the west. The seaboard sent reports of 120,000 bu Manitoba and 360,000 bu domestic wheat sold for export. Updike of Omaha wired 100,000 bu had been sold for export there.

There was a good deal of talk in the provisions pit to the effect that the embargo on hog shipments from Iowa may be lifted Monday. If this embargo is lifted a bigger run of hogs is looked for.

Charles Sincere & Co.: "Advices from customers west and northwest indicate so little oats moving and farmers willing to hold reserves to spring months that the small receipts are likely to come just as big export demand is revived. Outside buyers are expressing a preference for oats over wheat and corn."

Cash corn here was ½c lower. Oats were ¼@½c higher. Offerings of corn were fair, while there was a moderate run of oats on sale. The demand for corn was fair and there were sales of 350,000 bu, including 200,000 bu for export. Oats sales were 1,000,000 bu, including some sold late the previous day and not reported.

Broomhall cabled: "The weather in Europe generally is unfavorable for seeding and farm work, as rain and snow, with a severe drop in temperature, is noted. Farm work is mostly late and in some countries severely interfered with as a result of the war. Supplies are being conserved."

There will be a slight increase in the wheat area in the Punjaub district of India, and the outlook is fine, but in the central provinces dry weather is hurting wheat to some extent.

Estimated receipts for the day: Wheat, 171 cars; corn, 242 cars; oats, 140 cars; rye, 11 cars; barley, 43 cars; hogs, 34,000 head for Monday and 145,000 head for next week.

Kennard G. Keen and Jacob Friedman have made application for membership on the Chicago board of trade. Thomas A. Harney has posted his membership for transfer.

Harvey L. Boyer, who has been with Walter Fitch & Co., has made a connection with A. J. White.

Omaha reported better acceptances on bids to the country netting farmers $1.00.

Another board of trade membership sold yesterday at $2,200 net to the buyer.

Sales of 400,000 bu wheat to go to store were reported.

Minneapolis reported a little export business in flour.

WHEAT PRICES DRAG DOWNWARD

Speculative Trade Is Narrow with Sentiment Bearish; Cash Demand Good.

DECEMBER OATS FIRM.

The wheat trade was slow and prices were draggy yesterday. General reports in regard to the cash trade were encouraging to holders, but there was little speculative trade, and offerings on the little bulges were quite liberal. Final prices were ½c lower, and from the low point of the session there was not much rally. Commission houses and local traders sold. On the break Logan-Bryan and Barrell led the buying.

The cash sales here were placed at 250,000 bu, and at outside markets there was a good demand. The seaboard is buying wheat direct from Omaha and Kansas City, and in the southwest there is said to be a tremendous demand for all the offerings. Farm markets are lighter in nearly all sections.

Receipts Show a Decrease.

Primary receipts showed quite a falling off for the week at 13,217,000 bu, but were still more than 4,000,000 bu larger than a year ago. Receipts here were 263 cars, with 171 cars inspected yesterday. Primary arrivals for the day were 1,779,000 bu, or 448,000 more than last year. Receipts northwest were 747 cars, against 781 cars a year ago, and Winnipeg had 458 cars, against 1,099 cars a year ago.

Mills in the east are said to have bought wheat quite freely and are credited with having fair stocks. Minneapolis wheat stocks increased 70,000 bu for one day. For the week Duluth showed a decrease of 855,000 bu. Local stocks are expected to show a good increase for the week, receipts having been about 1,000,000 bu more than the shipments. Clearances for the day were 811,000 bu wheat and flour.

Flour Sold for Export.

The flour trade is improving a little and Minneapolis reported some flour sold for export. Liverpool cables were unchanged for both spot and futures. Broomhall reported a fair demand for spot wheat but said supplies were ample. Further unfavorable weather was reported in Argentina, but prices were lower at Buenos Aires and Rosario. In India the outlook is fine in the Punjaub, with an increased acreage.

In Hungary there is a great scarcity of foodstuffs, notwithstanding rigid economy. Cash wheat was reported sold to mills here at higher relative prices. Weather conditions were favorable for a free movement in the northwest. Continued dry weather is causing some concern in the west and southwest.

December Corn Is Weak.

December corn was weak and there was more pressure on the December. Resting prices showed net losses of ¼c to ½@⅝c. The movement is fairly liberal, with primary receipts of 1,016,000 bu. For the week primary arrivals were 6,828,000 bu, against 3,249,000 bu a year ago. Receipts here were 239 cars, with 242 cars inspected yesterday. The cash market was ½c lower and sales were 350,000 bu, including 200,000 bu old corn for export.

Weather conditions were ideal throughout the belt. Offerings from the country were moderate except from the northern portions of the belt. Cables were ¼@½d up on the less favorable Argentine weather conditions. The spot demand continues good abroad in spite of the liberal Plate shipments.

Export Oats Sales Large.

Offerings of oats were fair, but there was a good demand for the December as a result of the big export business. Knight-McDougal bought December freely. Tietgens, Wagner, and Logan-Bryan bought May. Armour sold December. Resting prices for futures were ⅛c to ⅛@¼c up. Cash prices were ¼@½c up, and sales were 800,000 bu, making about 2,000,000 bu sold in two days. A New York message said there had been charters made the last week for about 3,500,000 bu oats. Milwaukee was said to have sold 200,000 bu oats for export. Receipts were 121 cars, with 140 cars inspected today. Primary receipts for the week were 4,677,000 bu, compared to 3,719,000 bu a year ago.

Big Hog Run Expected.

Provisions were easier, there being considerable selling on the report the embargo on shipments of hogs from Iowa would be lifted the first of the week. All indications point to a big run of hogs the next few weeks. Good sales of lard and hams were reported yesterday. Receipts were 11,000, with 34,000 expected Monday and 145,000 for the week. Western receipts were 539,200, against 585,000 a year ago. Liverpool lard prices were 6d lower.

Barley Prices are Firmer

Rye ruled steady, with sales of cash No. 2 at $1.07 and of No. 3 at $1.05½. Receipts, 11 cars.

The hog market recovered Friday's closing decline and receipts of 9,000 head were cleared on a firm basis, with several loads of prime heavy and butcher hogs clearing at $7.50@7.60, while hogs that had been fed for the international fat stock show were received and sold at $7.65@7.70. The trade was of good volume, and all offerings in the pens were cleared before the close of business. The bulk of the supply sold at $7.30@7.50.

Final quotations made hogs largely 35c lower than at the opening Monday, while pigs were little changed. Prices were 20@25c lower than at this time a year ago. Receipts this week were 131,600 head, compared with 178,848 head a year ago.

At a meeting of the Chicago live stock exchange it was decided to have an open market at Chicago on Thanksgiving day. Stock will be received and sold the same as on any other day of the week. This will be the first time in the history of the trade that business was not suspended on Thanksgiving day.

CATTLE.

Cattle receipts at Chicago this week totaled little more than 29,000 head, or less than 50 per cent of normal for this season of the year. The demand was proportionately curtailed and prices worked steadily downward, closing 75c@$1.00 lower for steers and 25@50c lower for cows, as compared with opening values at the start of the week. The falling off in receipts was due to the fact that country shippers were advised not to ship any but fat cattle, and these only in limited numbers, during the maintenance of the embargo against the outward movement of live stock from Chicago. The demand, on the other hand, was curtailed by the quarantine restrictions, the close proximity of Thanksgiving week, when poultry will replace meats to a large extent, and by the abandonment of the international fat stock show, as it is expected many fat steers will come on sale that would have been held for exhibition. Offerings of all cattle were well cleared at the close of the week, but traders could not see any promise of immediate improvement in the situation and advised country owners to hold back their cattle for at least another week unless compelled to ship.

Cattle at six western markets for the week, 120,000, against 163,700 the same week a year ago and 164,600 two years ago. Total for 1914 to date, 5,886,000, against 6,724,000 the same period in 1913.

SHEEP.

Sheep and lamb values fluctuated over a wide range during the week, but closed near the highest level of the season, showing net gains of 10@25c. Packers had been expected to raid the market at the reopening of business, as the quarantine against outgoing shipments left them with no outside competitors to contend with, and sellers were ready to make concessions at the start. It was soon seen that local requirements were equal to the shortened receipts, however, and losses in values were quickly recovered. Lambs sold up to $9.35, or as high as at any time this year, while wethers topped at $6.50 and yearlings reached $8.00. Receipts for the week aggregated about 66,000 head, against actual arrivals of 114,921 the same week last year. There were no shipments, while a year ago shippers took 47,235 head.

Receipts for Nov. 23 were estimated at 12,000 cattle, 25,000 hogs, and 20,000 sheep, against actual arrivals of 15,507 cattle, 35,704 hogs, and 40,900 sheep for Monday, Nov. 24, 1913.

I Have Ready Capital For Your Advertising Campaign

Are you the head of a high-class, well-rated American business of National scope? Are you disposed to inaugurate, resume or to continue Advertising activities—to "cash in" on the new "Made-in-America" movement now?

You need not let the temporary inflexibility of the Money Market deter you.

A new resource—an entirely equitable and confidential arrangement for financing a several months' National Campaign—is offered by the Treasurer of a leading Advertising Agency. Address, in confidence, as below.

AMERICA has the money to spend. Buying sentiment is aroused.

This European war situation represents the time of all times to establish quality merchandise, made in this country, favorably and permanently with home consumers.

Inactivity in the face of this opportunity simply means giving your competitors the open road to new trade and rich profits.

Advertise now! If you deem it more expedient to utilize your available funds for other purposes, I will accept your commercial paper.

As financial head of one of the livest, best-known and most successful advertising agencies in America, I know the soundness of right advertising investments.

Also, I believe in the profits that will follow this home-products-boosting movement—so thoroughly that I am willing to back it with my own ready capital.

My object is purely selfish. It is to build new business—a still greater number of representative, non-competitive National accounts—for our agency. I know that the business we secure we will hold.

We are organized to serve such clients, and I honestly believe that the specialized creative and co-operative selling service we render is unmatched in present day advertising and merchandising.

And Service should be your primary consideration in reviewing my proposal.

This demonstrated, I am in a position to extend exceptionally liberal lines of credit, in substantial amounts, with the purpose of carrying advertisers to the successful outcome of their "Made-in-America" campaigns. This credit to be protected by the firms' own—or equally reliable securities.

Concerns should be well rated, established, of high relative importance in their respective fields.

Letters of inquiry must come from principals only, executives of companies interested. They will be held in strictest personal confidence—to the extent of never entering our general files.

I will willingly place my time against that of any business man meeting the above qualifications, and will gladly give evidence to prove our ability to meet the most rigid qualifications he may ask of us.

An interview entails no obligation.

I believe that this merits your serious consideration. Please address—

BUSINESS TREND CONTINUES GOOD

Confidence in Finance and Trade Shows Growth for Week.

INVESTORS ARE ACTIVE.

New York, Nov. 21.—Confidence in the financial and business position increased during the week. The quick reversal of the decision to open the stock exchange today for regulated dealings in listed bonds carried a warning of liquidation in unanticipated volume. Sharp declines in the irregular markets suggested the hazard of liquidation in a free market.

Opening to subscriptions in London for Great Britain's huge war loan of $1,750,000,000 might add to pressure on the New York market. That the exchange is determined to resume business in part at an early date is borne out, however, by the fact that another plan to reopen is to be submitted to the governors early next week.

Improved Investment Demand.

Signs of improved investment demand were manifest, the opening of the federal reserve banks offering much encouragement. Rapid retirement of emergency currency and loan certificates did not prevent a pronounced easing of money rates. Good auguries were drawn from the success of municipal and corporation financing soon to be provided for.

Exchange rates were held down to nearly normal and heavy exports of war materials kept up supplies in that market.

Difficulties were still met in cotton exports in spite of the reopening of exchanges and removal of contraband restrictions. Export demand for copper, on the contrary, improved, regardless of the embargo.

There were increased inquiries and larger orders in the steel trade. The effect of the rapid marketing of wheat on reserve supplies caused some forebodings. November gross earnings of railroads registered severe shrinkage. President Wilson's reference to the problems of the railroads in his letter to Secretary McAdoo added to hopes of a favorable rate decision.

Clearing House Statement.

The first statement of the local clearing house under the new banking laws was rather unsatisfactory, in that it failed in its abbreviated form to disclose any increases or contractions in the detailed account, while excess reserves reached the record breaking aggregate of $176,830,540, due largely to reduced reserve requirements.

Closing: Mercantile paper, 5@5½. Sterling exchange steady; sixty day bills, $4.8525; for cables, $4.8885; for demand, 4.8825. Bar silver, 49c. Exchanges, $245,949,160; balances, $15,-815,379. For the week exchanges, $1,402,845,-203; balances, $82,223,312.

New York Banks Issue Statement on Effect of New Reserve System.

The New York bank statement yesterday, as issued under the new form, made an unexpected showing as the figures appeared over the wire. The excess reserve was given as above $176,000,000, as compared with $7,413,900 the previous week, an increase of $169,416,640. The figures also showed a gain in deposits of $102,606,000 against the previous week.

The New York clearing house committee announced that yesterday's statement would be made to conform with the reserve requirements under the federal banking act. The latter provides for a reserve of 18 per cent of demand deposits and 5 per cent of time deposits, being roundly a decrease of 7 per cent. The New York clearing house, however, has made some computations that do not appear in the net results.

Based on last week's statement, the amount of deposits shown is inexplicable, unless there be an error in the statement of deposits as made yesterday. If there be deducted from net demand deposits net time deposits of over $91,000,000 then there would be shown total deposits of $1,936,028,000, which would be an increase of $10,674,000 over last week and would make the increase in surplus reserve around $174,500,000. However, the figures yesterday and those of the previous week are presented in the following table, as they were issued in the two statements:

Real Estate Bonds and Mortgages.

The main advantages of a real estate bond, in comparison with an individual mortgage, is found in its convenient denomination, $100, $500, or $1,000, and the fact that the interest is paid the day it falls due.

There are certain details that the loaner of money on a mortgage must attend to or have done by an agent, but when the investor buys the mortgage through a mortgage loan house instead of lending directly the house generally performs the work of seeing that taxes are paid and the insurance kept up and sometimes of collecting the interest.

However, whether the mortgagee or his agent collects the interest, delays in paying it occur. The real estate bond probably is the obligation of a large owner of property who has bookkeepers at work. From the completion of the building preparations are made to pay interest and serial bonds as they fall due, each month's rents being charged to different accounts for this purpose. At the end of each period of six months the money is ready automatically to pay the coupons.

With the small debtor it is different. Anything, from a slip of memory to bad luck at cards, may delay his payment temporarily. Ultimate payment is just as certain as is the payment of bonds, but the liability to delays compels the loaner to keep on hand more idle funds than are necessary for the bondholder.

On the other hand, it can be claimed for mortgages in general, including city and country loans, that they pay a slightly higher average rate of interest than bonds. Where this difference exists it is usually compensated, in part at least, by the detail work that must be done and the vigilance exercised on the part of the creditor to guard against loss through failure of the debtor to pay his taxes and keep his buildings insured.

Bonds on Unfinished Buildings.

M. W. B.—Bonds are sold almost daily in Chicago on buildings which are in process of construction. Most people would consider a building which was all under lease as better security than one not yet leased, but the question whether construction work is completed is of less importance provided the loan is in the hands of a competent and reputable firm. The safeguards under which money is advanced to building contractors make loss through their failure to finish a building almost impossible.

Brief Answers to Correspondents

G. V. R.—The Aberdeen Light and Power company has outstanding $600,000 of stock, $200,000 first mortgage 6 per cent bonds, and $48,000 second mortgage notes. The net earnings reported for 1913 were more than three times the interest charges. The company appears to be strong, but the community served is small. Before investing it would be well to inform yourself carefully about the growth and prospects of the town.

J. A.—No preferred stock is in the class with a gilt edged mortgage bond as regards safety of principal. Quaker Oats preferred stock, of which there is $9,000,000 outstanding, pays 6 per cent. There is $7,500,000 common outstanding on which 10 per cent is paid. At the official minimum price Quaker Oats preferred yields no more than a good bond.

BRITAIN RECALLS PAISH; FINANCIAL PLANS HALTED.

Envoys of Bank of England Called Home to Explain American Suggestions as to Credit.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—Plans for clearing up the international financial situation and paving the way for reopening of the London and New York stock exchanges came to an abrupt halt today with the departure of Sir George Paish and Basil B. Blackett of the English treasury for New York. They expect to sail for England next week, and it is not believed that they will return.

According to Secretary McAdoo, Sir George has been called back to England by Chancellor Lloyd-George to explain the proposals cabled to London by him.

Some officials here were not so optimistic tonight about the success of the American plans. The point on which the English bankers are believed to be sticking—and the one about which they deside a personal explanation from Sir George—is the creation of a $100,000,000 credit fund by the Bank of England to protect American securities which may be sold on the reopening of the London exchange.

RESERVE BANKS REPORT RESULTS

Condition of Twelve Institutions Is Set Forth by Federal Board.

STORY OF FIRST WEEK.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—The first showing of the condition of the twelve federal reserve banks was made public today by the federal reserve board. The statement includes operations for the five preceding days and is preliminary to the detailed statements that will come weekly later.

Members of the board did not expect rediscounting operations to be large or quantities of federal reserve notes to be taken out until the banks were firmly organized, their first reserve installments colelcted, and the way paved for handling commercial business for member banks.

Condition of the Banks.

The statement of condition follows:

Gold coin and gold certificates	$203,415,000
Other lawful money	37,308,000
Total cash reserve	240,723,000
Loans and discounts	5,607,000
All other assets	95,000
Total	$246,425,000
Capital paid in	18,072,000
Reserve deposits	227,138,000
Federal reserve notes in circulation	1,215,000
Total	$246,425,000

Gold reserve against all liabilities, 89 per cent; cash reserve against all liabilities, 105 per cent; cash reserve against all liabilities, after setting aside 40 per cent gold reserve against federal reserve notes in circulation, 105 per cent.

"Rediscounting privileges have been availed of to a considerable extent in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, and Kansas City," said the board in its supplemental statement. "Elsewhere the showing is much smaller.

Federal Reserve Notes Supplied.

"Federal reserve notes to meet local demands have been issued principally in Chicago, New York, and Minneapolis, but every bank has been supplied with an adequate quantity of notes to meet its needs. The relatively small amount of rediscounts as compared with the resources of the system is due to the policy of the federal reserve board in encouraging the payment of reserve deposits in actual money instead of in rediscounted paper. Rates of rediscount established a week ago were fixed with this policy in mind. Reports from all districts are of the most encouraging nature and the outlook for business is stated as satisfactory.

"The establishment of the system already has had an important effect in increasing the lending power of the local banks in addition to the loan power of the federal reserve banks."

Protest Terminal Plan.

Property owners protested yesterday against the proposal of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to establish a freight terminal south of Fourteenth street between Western avenue and Paulina street. They appeared befor a subcommittee of the council local industries committee. The present freight yard of the railroad company at Twelfth street is to be vacated to afford an approach to the new Union station.

NONCO
OPERATING WORLD'S LARGEST TRUCK FARM

NONCO FARM Is located in the heart of one of the most fertile areas of land on the American Continent, the title to which rests in the Chicago Title and Trust Company. It is being cultivated by Hollanders—the world's best and most thorough farmers. NONCO has a $30,000 power plant and a $22,000 club house. It has its own transportation line, its own telephone lines, docks and warehouses; it has a modern dairy now under construction and will operate one of the finest canneries in the United States.

Nonco Already Has Assets of $595,000

To get this farm under more intensive cultivation and to complete the canning and dairy plants, we are offering to the public a limited number of certificates of ownership in this magnificent farm. Each certificate stands for the ownership of 1 acre.

You Get 6% Interest, ½ Net Profits of Your Land and of Canning and Dairy Plants

NONCO pays you from the start 6% annual interest, which is rental for your land. NONCO pays all taxes, all operating expenses, develops the soil, plants, cultivates, harvests and markets the crops and gives you in addition to the rental ONE-HALF THE NET CROP PROFITS FROM YOUR FARM AND A SHARE IN THE PROFITS OF THE CANNING FACTORY, THE DAIRY AND THE OTHER DEPARTMENTS OF THIS FARM FACTORY.

TERMS OF PAYMENT We offer these interest bearing and profit sharing ownership certificates for a limited time at $20 DOWN AND $5 PER MONTH FOR EACH OWNERSHIP CERTIFICATE. This allows you 21 months for payment. You can purchase as many of these certificates as you desire.

NONCO PROFITS

The ownership certificates you will purchase in NONCO constitute the most valuable investment that you can make today. The company itself expects to earn an enormous dividend within the next year on its share of the profits from this extraordinary enterprise. If the men who have devoted the best years of their lives to this project are justified in their belief that one-half the profits from this farm will make them independent, then for the holders of ownership certificates there is double protection. NONCO is in the making—it is the coming Giant of food producing projects. In six months—or a year at the most—the fortunate investors in this wonderful farm will thank us for the opportunity this announcement presented to them to invest some of their savings in NONCO.

The Biggest Thing The People of Chicago Have Ever Known Is Now Ready For Them

Scrip

Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

—a mile in travel
for a dollar in trade

All over Chicago, in leading stores in every line of trade, you can now get SCRIP with every cash purchase you make—and SCRIP means FREE TRAVEL, FREE MILEAGE, anywhere in the world you want to go, on any trolley, railroad, boat or steamship in the world. For every dollar you spend you can get a mile of SCRIP—for every quarter you spend you can get a quarter of a mile of SCRIP—and for every ten-cent piece you spend you can get a tenth of a mile of SCRIP. Leading grocers, leading dry goods stores, leading drug stores, leading hardware stores, leading jewelers, leading clothiers—leading merchants in every line of trade all over Chicago, from the loop to the suburbs, will now give you SCRIP with every cash purchase you make.

From now on every mouthful you eat will mean another click of the rails on a railroad trip, or another thrill of delight on lake boat or ocean steamship. Every peck of potatoes you buy will mean another glimpse of entrancing scenery, of farms and hills and lakes and rivers. Every loaf of bread or sack of flour will mean another pull at the throttle of the locomotive that carries you on, or a few minutes more of luxurious enjoyment on the deck of a steamer as you plow through the waters of lake or ocean. Every pair of shoes for yourself or your children, every pair of stockings, every hat, every ribbon, will add to the length of your trip. Every pair of gloves will mean a mile or two more, every bar of soap will carry you further, every suit of clothes will mean another city passed through or another headland or bay brought to view—and all just as free as the air that you breathe, through the saving of SCRIP.

Your SCRIP will be redeemed at our offices in the Continental and Commercial Bank Building, corner of Adams and La Salle Streets, ANY TIME YOU PRESENT IT, whether it's tomorrow or twenty years from now. It's as good as Government Bonds. It's as good as gold dollars. If you make a purchase tomorrow at a store that issues SCRIP, you can turn the SCRIP into a railroad ticket just as soon as you can get to our office—a mile in travel for a dollar in trade. And if you want to take a longer trip than the SCRIP you have entitles you to, you can simply apply your SCRIP as far as it will go and pay cash for the balance.

Ask Your Merchant

for SCRIP whenever you make a purchase, no matter what it is. He may be so busy with his customers that he'll forget to give you your SCRIP. Don't let him forget it. Make every single dollar you spend, every quarter you spend, every ten-cent piece you spend, give you its share of glorious, free, delightful travel.

Think of the trips you will have the coming year through getting SCRIP with every purchase you make! Think of the railroad trips through the clear country air, out where the sky is blue and the sunshine is brighter than it ever can be in the city! Think of the summer resorts you can go to, think of the hills and mountains and gorges, all the glorious, magnificent scenery of the East and the West that SCRIP will carry you to! Think of the rides on the lake, the trips to the seashore, a first class passage across the Atlantic to Europe if you wish it—all FREE through the saving of SCRIP!

Look for the stores that issue SCRIP. Make every single penny you spend apply on a railroad, boat or steamship trip.

ASSAULTS BY GOPHERS UPSET CHICAGO, 13 TO 7

Steady Marches Through Line Give Northmen Touchdowns.

LOCAL SCORE ON PASS.

Solon and Hamilton Rip Forwards to Shreds; Des Jardien and Gray Hurt.

BY RING W. LARDNER.

Minnesota is hereby awarded second place in the conference football race for 1914. It is not believed that Indiana and Northwestern will file a protest.

The Gophers beat Chicago by three touchdowns in the final game of the year at Stagg field yesterday. The score was 13 to 7. Two Minnesota touchdowns didn't count because they weren't made. If the time had been extended two seconds in each half the score would have been 26 to 7. Mayer would have kicked one more goal and missed one.

However, Minnesota was almost as pleased as if it had counted twice as many points as it did. As for the Maroons, they should be grateful that the game was as close as it was. If they had depended on their running attack all the afternoon they'd have scored seven or eight safeties instead of one touchdown.

Russell Chief Gainer.

Most of the time it was hard to tell which were Chicago's backs and which were Minnesota's, for they were all going in the same direction—toward the Maroon goal. If Flood or Schafer or Berger gained five yards all told it was when your reporter wasn't looking. Pete Russell, handicapped by a stiff right arm, compiled practically all the yards, feet, and inches that were credited to Chicago. He made two dandy punt returns and got away a couple of times for short dashes from kick formation. He also heaved two forward passes that worked and without them the Gophers' goal line never would have been crossed.

Russell was what there was of Chicago's attack, and that isn't saying much for him. He probably could have done more than he did, but for a long time he stayed out of everything for fear a blow on his bum shoulder would send him to the side lines and leave the Maroons worse off than ever.

Break Through Maroons.

It may be said for the other Maroon backs that it wasn't all their fault. On innumerable occasions the Gophers' forwards were on top of them before they could start. This was because the Minnesota linemen were meeting with little opposition. On other occasions, just about as innumerable, the Chicago forwards would hold long enough to let the backs get started, and when those backs started there was no stopping them till they were almost up to the line of scrimmage.

In an effort to fix one leak in his line Mr. Stagg used nearly everybody on the campus at right guard. Kixmiller started. Along comes McConnell and kicks miller out. Then White tried it for a spell, but the gap seemed to be widening all the time, so Stagg sent Redmon in to plug it. It's a huge hole that Redmon can't cork up, but so far as I could see the Gophers kept right on leaking through while Redmon was in. When Capt. Des Jardien was hurt Kixmiller came back in and Redmon went to center. It was the general opinion after the game that if Stagg had been able to play all his right guards at once Minnesota wouldn't have had such a picnic.

Chicago Lucky to Score.

The Maroons were lucky to score, because they were outclassed in everything but punting. But the Gophers were lucky to be playing the Maroons when the latter were in such horrible condition. Doc Williams' team was young and green; Doc Stagg's was black and blue. Stagg would gladly have taken some of Williams' inexperienced men in exchange for some of his own who'd had too much experience for the good of their health.

Most of the Maroons who weren't hurt before the game started were in sad shape when it was over. Capt. Des Jardien received a kick in the groin that put him out of business. He was taken from Stagg field to St. Luke's hospital. He had to quit before the game was over, and he hated to quit, because it was his last game. Russell's right arm, stiff when he first came on the field, was worse than that last night, and his relatives and friends will have to help him cut his pork chops for several meals to come. Huntington also was badly battered, as was Stegeman. Both these gents were footballing for the last time and they did dandy work.

Blocked Kick Aids Locals.

It is rumored that Huntington was the boy who got through and blocked that kick of Hamilton's in the first half and gave Chicago its chance to score. It certainly was Stegeman who caught Russell's forward passes, two of 'em, and helped gain for the Maroons the ground they never could have gained with their running game. Stegeman was played at right end to make him eligible to receive the passes. The Gophers, seeing him there, might have known he was up to some such mischief. He got down the field on punts ahead of most of his mates, and he and Huntington stopped the Min-

Football Toll for Year Is 13.

FOOTBALL has claimed thirteen victims this season, but only one death is attributed to a college. In this instance the player who died after a scrimmage was found to be a victim of organic heart trouble. Most of the deaths were due to games played on high school or prairie gridirons. In every case the victim was 20 years or under and the cause in several instances is believed to be lack of physical condition for such a strenuous sport. Injuries have been as frequent as in other seasons, but in no one case has death been preceded by a long siege of pain. Following is the list of deaths this season:

McGinnis, Floyd, Ada, O., High school, 19 years; killed in practice game Sept. 21.

Allen, Ray, Sapulpa, Okla., High school, 19 years; died thirty-five minutes after injury in game Oct. 3.

Wiseman, Albert, Sac City, Ia., High school, 18 years; suffered concussion of brain Oct. 9, died Oct. 10.

Hays, Charles C., Fordham university, New York, 18 years; kicked in stomach in game of Oct. 12, died Oct. 14.

NEBRASKA WINS FROM HAWKEYES

Cornhuskers Take West of the Mississippi Title by 16 to 7 Score.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—A strong concentrated attack combined with the ability of Capt. Vic Halligan to kick goals from the field gave Nebraska a 16 to 7 victory over Iowa today on the local's gridiron in a game which gave the Cornhuskers the undisputed right to the title west of the Mississippi river and entitles them to be considered one of the claimants of the western championship.

Although Nebraska did not need the touchdown it scored, the ability of Halligan to kick goals from placement was the big feature of the bitterly fought contest. This player, who is without doubt one of the best linemen in the west, sent the oval between the posts and over the crossbar three times and his efforts were worthy of all the commendation he is receiving tonight from the 600 enthusiasts who made the trip to this town to see the contest.

Halligan Scores Goal.

In the opening period Halligan sent the ball over the bar from the thirty-three yard line for the first count. The oval barely cleared the beam, but when this score was registered it looked as if it would be enough to decide the contest. Not content with this achievement, Halligan sent the ball between the posts in the second quarter from the thirty-seven yard mark and the half ended with Nebraska on the long end of a 6 to 0 score.

Iowa came back strong in the third period, but its best efforts were of no avail. The Hawkeyes carried the ball inside the visitors' twenty yard mark three times, but always the final punch was lacking. Attempts to make goals from the field failed. Iowa seemed able to carry the ball inside the twenty-five yard mark without apparent effort, but every time Capt. Gunderson's men started what looked like a successful march Nebraska braced and held like a stone wall.

Potter Over for Touchdown.

An exchange of punts finally left the ball in midfield and from the fifty yard mark, the Cornhuskers started a successful march to the Hawkeye goal, which finally resulted in Quarter Back Potter going over on a straight dive for the first touchdown. The goal was kicked and the score stood 13 to 0 in favor of the visiting eleven at the close of the third period.

In the final quarter, Iowa took a decided brace, with the fortunes of war against it. The Hawkeyes opened up with every forward pass and spread formation they had been taught. After getting possession of the ball in midfield and making a few yards by straight football tactics, Quarter Back Gross shot a forward pass to Carberry, who picked it out of the air and ran for a touchdown. Carberry kicked goal.

Intercepted Pass Painful.

Realizing that another touchdown and its following goal would give it a victory by the margin of 1 point, Iowa again opened up with all sorts of trick and forward pass plays. One of these attempted forward passes was intercepted by a Cornhusker, and Nebraska rushed the ball close enough to allow Halligan to make his third field goal from the thirty-three yard line.

This ended the scoring of the bitterly fought contest, but both teams must be given credit for trying to register points by almost any kind of open plays. There

Victory Over Wisconsin, 24-9, Gives Illini 'Big Nine' Title

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Illinois clinched a clear title to the conference football championship by crushing the Wisconsin eleven today at Camp Randall in the final game of the year. The score was 24 to 9, and only in the third quarter did the Badgers compare to the stars from Urbana.

Harold Pogue, the little, studious, blinky eyed half back of the Illini, got nine-tenths of the honors. He reveled in football prowess, and twice, after catching a punt, he ripped, wriggled, and dodged clear through the Badger team for a touchdown. Each run was for a distance of sixty-five yards.

Many other times he got loose for gains of from ten to thirty yards. Not in years have the Wisconsin rooters seen such spectacular open field playing. Pogue was the smallest but mightiest man on the field. Before the game was half over his name was being screamed from the stands even by the Wisconsin students.

Pogue Elusive as an Eel.

The sturdy defensive players on the Badger team were unable to get him. Occasionally he was nailed and hurled to earth, but several times on such occasions it was because he slipped and lost his feet. Once after breaking loose it looked as if three Wisconsin men tackled him at the same time, but in some miraculous manner he fairly bounced away from all of them and continued goalward like some mad animal which had run amuck. Pogue's two spectacular runs and one by Clark gave the Illini all three of their touchdowns. Clark's came before the game had been in progress three minutes. Wisconsin punted and the ball hit the ground. Clark jogged over to the ball and after nearly all of the Badgers had gathered around him he snatched the ball and circled around the entire bunch, running seventy yards for a touchdown. These three spectacular runs and a field goal by Bart Macomber from the twenty-two yard line accounted for all of Illinois' points.

Macomber Punts Finely.

Macomber did some swell punting all through the game and carried the ball well, though he never got loose for anything extremely thrilling. The Badgers' nine points, all made in the third quarter, were the result of a touchdown and a safety. Wisconsin had the wind in its favor and the touchdown was largely made possible by the execution of a forward pass for a gain of forty-five yards.

In this quarter the Badgers really outplayed the Illini, and after making one touchdown they tore down the field again, reaching the three yard line before being stopped. Here Macomber dropped back of the goal line to punt, but a bad pass got away from him, and Kelley of Wisconsin pinned him to earth for two points. Wisconsin's great line displayed splendid defensive power at all times. It could stop the Illini backs in ordinary plays from scrimmage, but was helpless when Pogue and Clark got the ball from punts.

Badger Tackles Play Well.

The tackles, Capt. Keeler and "Cul" Buck, were conspicuous all the time, especially the latter, who broke up many a play before it was started. The offensive work of the Badgers, however, didn't compare to the snappy, precise, and active work of their rivals. Wisconsin backs were slow in getting away, and without the liberal use of the forward pass it is likely they would not have scored.

By winning today the Illini went through the season with a string of victories, defeating every eleven met, and tonight Bob Zuppke, the former Oak Park leader, is seated among the great coaches of the west. Every player on the Illinois team declares Zuppke deserves all the honors. Last season was his first year there, and in the two seasons he has taken a tangled mass of ordinary football material and whipped it into a championship team. When the game was over the Illinois boys took turns of hugging the coach and "Little" Pogue.

For the first time in recent years Illinois has an undisputed championship eleven, winning clear cut victories over all its conference opponents. Illinois was unbeaten in 1910, but first honors were shared with Minnesota.

Bright sunshine and a nearly balmy breeze from the west made the conditions ideal for a championship combat.

First Quarter.

Mucks kicked off to Wagner, who returned to Illinois' fifteen yard line. Macomber punted on the first down to Bellows, who was downed on Wisconsin's thirty yard line. Wisconsin made five yards in two downs, then Bellows kicked. The ball hit the ground on Illinois' thirty yard line, where Clark picked it up on the bound, then dashed and dodged clear through the entire Wisconsin team seventy yards for a touchdown. Macomber kicked goal. Score: Illinois, 7; Wisconsin, 0.

When Illinois lined up again Pogue went to left half in place of Wagner. Mucks kicked off and Illinois marched down the field from its thirty yard line to Wisconsin's fifteen yard line, when the Badgers held for downs. They lost ten yards on two trials, then punted to Illinois in the middle of the field. The Illini rushed the ball to the fourteen yard line, where the Badgers braced, and Macomber made a goal from the field from the twenty-two yard line. Score: Illinois, 10; Wisconsin, 0.

After the kickoff an exchange of punts netted thirty yards for Illinois and it had the ball on Wisconsin's forty yard line. Illinois advanced to Wisconsin's twenty yard line, when time was called. Score: Illinois, 10; Wisconsin, 0.

Second Quarter.

On the second play Illinois fumbled and the ball went to Wisconsin on its twenty yard line. Bellows punted to Pogue, who returned to Illinois' forty-five yard line. Another exchange of punts and Illinois had the ball in midfield. There was another exchange of punts, then Bellows got a long punt to Pogue on the Illinois thirty-five yard line. The little Illinois star plunged and dodged down the field, shaking off four tacklers and never stopping until he covered sixty-five yards and planted the ball behind the goal. Macomber kicked goal. Score Illinois, 17; Wisconsin, 0.

There was much punting for the balance of the quarter. Illinois was penalized three times for offside plays and Wisconsin displayed bits of splendid attack, taking the ball to Illinois' twenty-five yard line, when time was called. Score: Illinois, 17; Wisconsin, 0.

Third Quarter.

Macomber kicked off to Bellows, who was downed on Wisconsin's twenty-five yard line. Wisconsin executed a great forward pass, Bellows to Kelly, on the first down for a gain of forty-five yards to Illinois' thirty yard line. Three plays netted eleven yards, and the ball was on Illinois' nineteen yard line. Rigger hit the left side for five yards, then a forward pass, Bellows to Smith, put the ball on Illinois' one yard line. Rigger hit the middle without gain, then Cummings

PURPLE BLANKED BY OHIO STATE

Buckeye Collegians Give Evanston Men Final Beating of Season.

Columbus, O., Nov. 21.—Ohio State closed its 1914 football season here today with a victory over Northwestern. The final score was 27 to 0.

The only chance the Purple players had to score came in the second period, when, aided materially by penalties, they advanced the ball to Ohio's twenty-five yard line. Full Back Patterson dropped back for a drop kick, but the ball went wide.

Ohio used the forward pass in making most of its long gains. Northwestern was unable to gain through Ohio's line and was compelled to resort to punting and the open style game.

Graft and Hobt were the individual stars of the contest.

Details of Play.

Northwestern kicked off to Graf, who returned twenty yards. Ohio made two first downs, Howard and Hobt working the ball to Northwestern's forty yard line. Pickerel fumbled and Northwestern recovered. The Purple made first down but lost the ball on three incomplete passes. Howard and Graf made two first downs on three plunges. A forward pass to Cherry and Buck by Graf scored the first touchdown. Godfrey kicked goal. State received the kickoff again and the quarter ended with the ball on Northwestern's fifteen yard line.

Howard made twelve yards around the end, and a forward pass, Pickerel to Graf, gained fifteen yards at the start of the second period. Godfrey missed goal from the field. Hightower returned ten yards after the touchback and Northwestern punted to Pickerel, who was downed in his tracks by Whittle. Hobt gained forty yards on an end run. Ohio was penalized fifteen yards for holding.

Howard Makes Touchdown.

Two forward passes netted forty yards and Howard carried the ball over on the next play. Godfrey kicked goal. State kicked to Williams, who returned fifteen yards. Williams made twenty-five yards on an end run. Ellis made twenty yards on a forward pass. Ohio held on its twenty yard line, but Patterson missed a drop kick from the thirty yard line.

Ohio scrimmaged on the twenty yard line, but the Northwestern line held and Cherry punted forty yards out of bounds. Patterson also punted forty yards out of bounds. Strader intercepted a forward pass and the half ended with Northwestern's ball in the center of the field. Score: Ohio State, 14; Northwestern, 0.

Ohio kicked off to Schneberger and Northwestern was penalized fifteen yards for holding. Whittle punted thirty-five yards and by a series of brilliant runs and forward passes Havens and Hobt carried the ball down to the goal, where Havens scored on a buck. Graf kicked goal.

Northwestern received but could not gain and punted thirty yards. Ohio failed on three forward passes and on the fourth attempt made first down. The game ended with the ball in State's possession on Northwestern's twenty yard line. Lineup:

HARVARD OVERWHELMS YALE BY 36 TO 0 SCORE

COOLIDGE ALSO STAR.

Left End Makes Run of Ninety-eight Yards for a Touchdown.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Harvard went through Yale this afternoon as a comet, all power and flame, whirls through a milky way. When Charles Brickley drove the ball between Yale's goal posts at exactly 4:12 p. m. and 71,000 persons, who had held their breath so greatly did they want young Brickley to succeed, exploded a yell like the roar of a rain fed river, he made the score Harvard 36, Yale 0. And there it stood in the few remaining heart beats of a wonderful football game.

Yale never had a chance from the shrilling of the first whistle. The men of Harvard came on the field romping like young lions and the men of Yale were poor little lions before them. It was a lovely and scrumptuous mêlé, but the way was short to the Yale goal line and a long, long way to Harvard's. It was the most decisive and thorough beating the Crimson ever gave the Blue and it came at a most unpropitious time.

Bowl Packed with Humanity.

There was the bowl, all brimming and overflowing with the greatest crowd that ever massed at an athletic contest on this side of the Atlantic. Surely the bowl merited a Yale triumph and did not deserve the sad, sad spectacle that fell as dusk slipped over the ramparts—Johnny Harvard's young and old boys snake dancing and chortling in triumphant glee, round and round and in and out the oval of green velvet.

The pride that rose at Princeton was completely purged in the bowl; but say this for Yale: Players, undergraduates and alumni bit hard on their disappointment, hid their humiliation, and at the last cheered finely as real men cheer for the conquerors.

Game Bristles with Incidents.

There were some who sat in the biting air and complained that the game was too one sided to be interesting, but these counted not at all. How could a game be dull that presented twenty-two india rubber and steel young giants, now colliding like trains head-on, now shooting the ball sidewise and forward, lightly as thistledown, swift as chain lightning, that revealed a ninety-eight yard run (all but two yards of the length of the field) by young Mr. Coolidge of Harvard; that brought Brickley into the fray for a scant five minutes for the opportunity, pluckily and skillfully taken advantage of, to round out his football career with one point for Harvard; that displayed the most stirring of the old brand of football and the most finished of the new brand.

Picture for a moment that vastness of the crowd that sat in the bowl fighting off the little devils of nervous prostration, against the ring so immense that individual faces were blotted out as your eye swept rapidly around the circle. Why, it was the most interesting, absorbing spectacle that was ever staged in this country.

Brickley's Sensational Entrance.

Take the episode of Brickley, not really recovered from an appendicitis operation, throwing off his red blanket and dashing to the gridiron like a madman when his time came. There were some who thought that this was the finest thrill of the game.

It is the plain truth that all Yale wanted Brickley to make good. An immense stillness fell over the bowl. When Hardwick lightly kicked out from the goal line and a fair catch was made, there wasn't a sound among the 71,000 loud enough to scare a butterfly. Brickley tossed off his headgear, trotted around the ball, took a sight on the line of the goal bar, made as if to pick up the discarded headgear, grinned at himself, and drew back the mighty right foot. One thump and it was done. The ball sang like a six inch shell straight between the posts.

Crowd Pulls for Brickley.

There was not a man or woman of the 71,000 who didn't realize what this kick meant to the Harvard captain. And what a yell there was! When 71,000 persons got up and really try to make a noise all together it is considerable of a rumpus. Certainly it never was before heard at a field of sport in this country. As for Brickley, he left the game then and there after five minutes of play in the final game of his career.

This incident, like the moment that Coolidge caught up a fumbled ball at the time it seemed as if Yale would score and fled like a scared deer the length of the field, the flashing, twisting passes, the ripping attack by Harvard, Mahan's field goal and Yale's hopeless but indomitable courage made up the features of the contest for the thousands who went for love of sport. Harvard demonstrated most effectively that momentum surely equals weight multiplied by velocity.

Crowd Story in Itself.

The crowd was a story all by itself, a story of color and action. It helped one understand the real, concrete meaning of vast numbers. We read about hundreds of thousands of men facing each other in France and Poland, and read

Des Jardien in Hospital.

After retiring from the game in the fourth quarter because of an injury Capt. Des Jardien was removed in a motor ambulance to St. Luke's hospital. There the Maroon captain's attending physician announced that a kick in the groin had produced ruptured blood vessels which were drained. Des Jardien's condition was not called dangerous.

BELOIT TOPPLES LAKE FOREST, 7-3

Forward Pass, Ward on End, Nets Only Touchdown.

Beloit, Wis., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—With a dazzling assortment of plays Beloit college eleven defeated Lake Forest, 7 to 3. An end run formation for a triple pass sent Ward around the goal posts in the third quarter for the only touchdown of the game. Ward also intercepted a pass once, warding off a touchdown. E. Krueger made a place kick from the Beloit fifteen yard line in the second period.

Ward played the greatest game of his career in the last game of his college course. Tracy, Gharrity, and Barbour starred for Beloit and the Krueger brothers and Gray for Lake Forest. Lineup:

LEWIS SCORES FIRST WIN.

Lewis institute wound up its season's football schedule with a victory over the Wheaton college team yesterday on Lewis field, 39 to 13. As this is the only triumph scored by the Lewis athletes, who have taken on a string of formidable teams this year, it was a signal for great celebration on the west side.

Trantow at full back and Johnny Bryan at quarter were the Lewis stars, each scoring two touchdowns. Malloy and Meyers counted the other two.

Trane Tech left Desplaines yesterday, leaving a trail of touchdowns in its wake. When the finish came Crane had won, 95 to 0. Crystal Lake was the opposition.

MORGAN PARK TO PLAY ERIE.

Morgan Park High school football team, which now holds the suburban lightweight championship following its victory over Oak Park High school, has accepted a challenge for a game to be played Thanksgiving day with the Erie, Pa., High school team. The team leaves for Erie Wednesday afternoon. The average weight of the Morgan Park team is 137 pounds. The Erie team averages 142 pounds. A banquet will be given to the team preceding its departure on Tuesday night.

DETAIL STORY OF MAROON DEFEAT BY THE GOPHERS

without definite conception. The mind passes lightly over a row of figures. But when you see 71,000 persons light on one spot and mill around all day and scurry and scramble for food (and drink, mayhap), and pack all streets and throng all roads until nowhere can you move without actual contact with some one, you get an understandable notion of what a really vast crowd is.

From the first kickoff it was nothing but Harvard. The Crimson machine began scoring right at the start, and after five minutes of play a forward pass to Hardwick netted the first score. After that the touchdowns came in rapid succession.

Harvard Line Stone Wall.

The breaks of the game certainly favored Harvard, but notwithstanding this Harvard would have won by a comfortable score any way. Its line held like a stone wall, and Yale's only chance in making ground by rushing was through the medium of forward and lateral passes, which were executed in a poor manner, compared with previous performances in this line.

Harvard's back field—Mahan, Bradlee, and Francke—was a wonderful combination, and Yale's line gave way to it almost every time the Crimson backs had the ball. Soon after Harvard's kickoff for Yale, Legore booted the ball to Mahan, and the speedy back dashed fifty yards before he was downed.

Steady plugging at Yale's line carried the ball to the five yard line, when Mahan shot a forward pass to Hardwicke for the first score of the game. In the second period after Legore muffed a punt, Francke was pushed over the line. Harvard failed at both tries for a goal from touchdown.

Long Run to Coolidge.

In the middle of the second period, when Yale's back field got under way, the Eli team carried the ball to Harvard's five yard line, when Knowles fumbled. Coolidge, Harvard's left end, gathered in the ball on the run and dashed ninety-eight yards for a touchdown. Mahan kicked goal and added three more points to Harvard's total on an easy field goal from the twenty-seven yard line. The half ended with Harvard twenty-two points to the good.

Harvard scored early in the second half, long runs by Mahan and Bradlee placing the ball on Yale's twenty yard line. A blocked kick was caught five yards nearer the goal, and in six plays Francke was shoved over. Yale came to life again in this period, and a long run of thirty-five yards by Legore to Harvard's fourteen yard line placed the ball within striking distance of the goal, but a forward pass from Legore to Carter was intercepted, and Yale's last chance for a score vanished.

Brickley Kicks Goal.

In the last period, after getting the ball at midfield on a punt, the Harvard backs ripped their way in split tackle and end plays to Yale's five yard line, from which point another clever forward pass from Mahan to Hardwick sent Harvard's score up to 35. Capt. Brickley then appeared and kicked the goal, which was the occasion of a great demonstration.

Capt. Talbot of Yale and Legore played better football than any other of their teammates, while Mahan and Brandlee stood out prominently for Harvard.

DARTMOUTH HAS EASY TRIUMPH OVER SYRACUSE

New Hampshire Team Defeats Heavier Opponents by a Score of 40 to 0.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 21.—A versatile Dartmouth eleven with bull-like rushes, sweeping end runs, and accurate passes in its repertoire of attack, overwhelmed a heavier team from Syracuse university today, 40 to 0. The game was played on a temporary gridiron, laid out on Fenway park.

Man for man, the New Hampshire eleven excelled its opponents, took advantage of nearly every one of the frequent fumbles of Syracuse, and used the forward pass successfully, while Syracuse could not make its open game work.

Dartmouth's scoring machine got into action almost immediately and scored in every period. Lineup:

AMES ROLLER WINS, 52 TO 0.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 21.—The heavy Ames team plowed its way to a 52 to 0 victory over Drake university this afternoon, the score being the largest ever made in any of the sixteen games played between the two schools. The Drake line played stubbornly at times, but was gradually worn out. Moss and Warren, the opposing quarterbacks, starred.

Illinois-Badger Notes.

Schobinger and Rue divided the full back work on the Illinois side about equally.

Senneff was in at half back a part of the time while Pogue retired to the side lines to get his breath between long runs.

Left Half Back Cummings of the Badgers was the best ground gainer of the lot, though Smith, his partner, did well on the same forward passes.

Athletic Director George Huff announced today that he has heard nothing definite about a post season game to help the Belgians. He personally is opposed to it, but gave his support on account of the cause.

Pogue was not started in the game because Zuppke figured he was a marked man and every Wisconsin player would try to bump him on the first play. Immediately after Clark made the first long run, three minutes after the game began, Pogue was rushed out to take Wagner's place.

NEBRASKA WINS FROM IOWA, 16-7 were marked men on both teams, and because of the ways the stars were covered it was impossible for either eleven to make consistent headway.

Both teams can be justly criticised for not taking advantage of the strong wind which blew from the north. When either eleven had the advantage of this most important football aid, neither resorted to punting, but was content to try to gain ground by use of old and new style tactics.

Nebraska Strong Eleven.

Nebraska must be given credit for a strong team. Under the able tutelage of Head Coach Stiehm and Assistant Hoeffel, both former Wisconsin players, the Cornhusker institution is represented by a formidable eleven, which would be a worthy foe for any eleven in the west. The players know football, and they have been taught the many forms of blocking and checking when playing on the defense. In Capt. Halligan, Rutherford, and Chamberlain, Nebraska has three players who must be considered when all-star elevens are selected.

Macomber kicked off to Stavrum, who returned to the Wisconsin thirty yard line. Illinois held, and Bellows punted to Clark on Illinois' twenty-five yard line. Clark got loose for a twenty yard run to the middle of the field. On a double pass Illinois fumbled and Smith recovered the ball, running to Illinois' twenty-two yard line. Two plays and a penalty against Illinois made it first down on Illinois' twelve yard line.

Badgers Score on Safety.

Here Illinois held for downs, and took the ball on its three yard line. Macomber dropped back for a punt, but fumbled a bad pass, and was downed back of his own goal line for a safety. Score: Illinois, 17; Wisconsin, 9.

Illinois took the ball on its twenty yard line and advanced to Wisconsin's forty-five yard line, when time was called. Score: Illinois, 17; Wisconsin, 9.

An exchange of punts started the quarter, then Pogue made an end run of fifteen yards to Wisconsin's thirty-five yard line. Two plays failed, and Illinois was penalized fifteen yards for holding. Illinois tried a forward pass and gained ten yards, but that was not enough, and Macomber tried a place kick from the forty-two yard line but went wide. Wisconsin could not gain, and Bellows punted to Pogue, who once more did a snake run of sixty-five yards through the entire Wisconsin team for another touchdown. Macomber kicked goal. Score: Illinois, 24; Wisconsin, 9.

Macomber Misses Field Goal.

Wisconsin kicked off and Illinois ripped down the field to Wisconsin's twenty yard line, when the Badgers braced. Macomber tried a field goal from the thirty-two yard line, but it fell short. Wisconsin could not gain, and the balance of the quarter consisted of punts and attempted forward passes, time being called with the ball in Illinois' possession on Wisconsin's forty-five yard line.

MISSOURI WINS FROM KANSAS BY SCORE OF 10 TO 7

Place Kick in the Last Quarter Clinches Honors for the Visitors.

Lawrence, Kas., Nov. 21.—There is no joy in Lawrence tonight, for the University of Kansas eleven was defeated by its historic rival, the University of Missouri, 10 to 7, here today. It was the first time a Missouri or Kansas eleven has won on the others' gridiron.

The triumph of Missouri hinged on a place kick from the twenty-four yard line early in the last quarter, and the final whistle probably prevented it adding another three points by the same process. The Kansans scored first, carrying the battle to the Missourians in the first ten minutes of play. After that Missouri outplayed the local eleven, Kansas being dangerous at only one stage—when Strothers missed a place kick from the thirty-eight yard line in the third period.

It was predicted the Tigers would attempt all manner of forward passes and depend on intricate football to win, while the Kansans were doped to stick to straight football. The Missourians, however, defeated their ancient enemy at its own game, carrying the ball by fierce charging line and the ability of their pony backs to plunge through the openings their aggressive forwards made.

Only two forward passes were attempted. Each eleven tried one and each was intercepted by the opponents. Lineup:

Knowles struggled through for six yards in two attempts, and the ball was on Harvard's twenty-nine yard line. Knowles plunged through center for two yards more. On the fourth down, with three yards to gain, a pretty forward pass, Knowles to Ainsworth, carried the ball to Harvard's thirteen yard line. Knowles made two yards outside of tackle. Harvard was penalized two yards for delaying the game. Knowles planted the ball on Harvard's six yard line, but tried the center for no gain. With fourth down and a yard to gain, Yale fumbled and Coolidge picked up the ball and ran the length of the field for a Harvard third score. Goal was kicked. Score, Harvard, 19; Yale, 0.

Mahan Returns Twenty Yards.

Walden kicked off to Mahan on Harvard's ten yard line, who returned twenty yards. On the first Mahan skirted Yale's right end for three yards and Bradlee went through center and ran to Yale's thirty yard line. He was thrown by Legore. Mahan went through center for five yards. Mahan then dropped back to the twenty-five yard line and easily made the goal.

Walden again kicked off to Francke on Harvard's twenty-five yard line. The ball was run back to the thirty-eight yard line. Mahan gained five yards through center and the half ended.

Third Period.

On a criss-cross, Wilson made five yards. On a lateral and a long forward pass of thirty-two yards Yale carried the ball to Harvard's forty-two yard line. On the next play another forward pass, Legore to Talbot, put the ball on Harvard's twenty-eight yard line. Knowles made three yards through center. The ball was on Harvard's twenty-seven yard line. In a lateral pass Legore carried the ball to Harvard's fifteen yard line. It was the longest run so far in the game by Yale. On another lateral pass play Legore could not gain round Harvard's left end. The period ended with Yale having the ball on Harvard's fourteen yard line.

Fourth Quarter.

Before the play started Logan, Parsons, and Hardwick went back into the Harvard line. On the first rush Legore, on being tackled, threw a lateral pass to Wilson. The ball was carried to Harvard's five yard line. Scovil made first down on the Crimson three yard line, but two similar efforts were stopped without gain. On the next play there was a Yale fumble and Legore was thrown back to Harvard's sixteen yard line. Legore, from a drop kick formation, hurled a forward pass to Brann, who was tackled hard, and the ball went to Harvard on their thirteen yard line.

Watson again went in for Logan and Withington replaced Weston. After three Harvard rushes Mahan punted and it was Yale's ball on Harvard's thirty-eight yard line. Two attempts at forward pass by Yale failed, but Wilson gained five yards through center. Legore then threw a forward pass out of bounds on Harvard's thirteen yard line.

Mahan went through center to Yale's fifteen yard line for another first down.

Brickley Enters Game.

Brickley took Francke's place and dropped back for a goal from the field. It was a fake, and Mahan carried the ball to Yale's five yard line. With Brickley still back of the line, Bradlee took the ball to the one yard line. Mahan carried the ball to within a foot of the goal line. There was holding and the ball was brought back to the fifteen yard line. Here Brickley dropped back, but it was a forward pass, Mahan to Coolidge. The ball was once more on Yale's five yard line. In all these plays Brickley was far behind the line and Harvard was rushing Yale down the field with ten men.

Watson then threw a forward pass to Hardwick for a fifth touchdown. The score was made in the corner of the field. Watson kicked out to Mahan and Brickley kicked goal. Score: Harvard, 36; Yale, 0.

Brickley went out at this point and was wildly cheered by the Harvard stands. McKinlock replaced Brickley. Mahan kicked to Scovil on Yale's goal line. The ball was run back to Yale's twenty-two yard line. Waite took Legore's place. On a lateral pass, Ainsworth to Scovil, there was a gain of nine yards. Wilson to Scovil to Waite on another lateral pass made another first down on Yale's forty-five yard line. A try at center netted a yard. Another lateral pass failed to gain. Yale tried a forward pass, which was incomplete.

Mahan could not gain at center, but on the next play he circled the Yale right end for a run to the forty yard line. McKinlock made two yards at center. But on the next play he couldn't gain. The game then ended.

DARTMOUTH AFTER HAWLEY?

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—That Jesse B. Hawley of Chicago, coach of the Iowa eleven, may be called to his alma mater, Dartmouth, as coach in 1915 was the announcement that electrified Iowa university students at a massmeeting before today's Iowa-Nebraska game. The presiding officer announced to 2,500 persons that the tradition which made it necessary for any alumnus of an eastern institution to return when summoned thus would be the only thing that would make the coach leave Iowa.

SHORT CONTEST TO LOMBARD

Naperville, Ill., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—By decisively defeating Northwestern college, 27 to 7, Lombard college of Galesburg is in the lead for the minor college championship of Illinois. The game was called at the end of the third quarter on account of darkness.

In the third period Washington and Jefferson crossed Georgetown's goal line twice. Both goals from touchdowns were kicked and thereafter the Pennsylvanians were on the defensive the greater part of the time.

Penalties had a lot to do with Georgetown's touchdown. Three successive penalties gave Georgetown the ball on Washington and Jefferson's three yard line. On the next play Georgetown fumbled. The ball rolled over the line and a Georgetown player fell on it for a touchdown. Lineup:

Before you pay more find a car that gives more —and before you pay less than $985 for a FOUR, find one that gives you as much as you get in the Studebaker FOUR

You'll no doubt look at half a dozen cars before you make up your mind. And as a matter of fact, that is the only way to judge. For you can't, for example, begin to appreciate what this price of $985 means until you study the Studebaker's design

—until a demonstrator shows you, for instance, the FULL-floating Rear Axle that takes the weight off the driving shaft and sets the shaft free to turn power into progress;

—until he shows you how FULLY equipped this FOUR is with Timken Bearings everywhere;

—until you ride and drive it over all sorts of roads and demonstrate to yourself how marvelously Studebaker engineers improved its riding qualities when they lightened the weight and re-balanced it.

Why not look at a Studebaker tomorrow? Even if you are not going to buy until next May, it's worth while knowing now what you CAN get for $985 and how needless it is to pay more. And you, you know, make up your mind not to miss the pleasure of a car the rest of the winter, when you really need it most.

HOW CRIMSON ELEVEN MUZZLED THE YALE BULLDOG

RUSHES TOPPLE MAROONS, 13-7, IN FINAL CLASH

nesota backs when they were stopped, which wasn't often.

Aside from the Chicago offense, the saddest thing about the game was Dolly Gray. It was Dolly's last game, as it was Des Jardien's, Stegeman's, Huntington's, Berger's, and others whose names I can't recall. But Dolly was a participant only for a moment. He came out so soon that he almost met himself going in.

Sad Exit for Dolly Gray.

The Maroon bugs cheered as they saw Gray hustle on to the field late in the second half. He was immediately given the ball for a dash round Minnesota's left end. The Maroon bugs continued to cheer, for it looked as if he'd get away. But he stumbled and fell and a Gopher fell on him. Then the Maroon bugs groaned, for they saw that he was hurt again. He was hurt in the same spot, his right or left ankle, I don't know which. With tears in his eyes he limped back to the bench which he had left so recently. I would say that then it was Good-by Dolly Gray if I hadn't sprung that one last year.

Before commenting briefly on the Gophers I will give you a couple of intensely interesting statistics. The score of yesterday's game was the same as that of the 1913 battle between these two teams. Two of the Minnesota linemen, Cap Rosenthal and Frank Mayer, the left tackle, are Poles. Two or three sticks have played on Minnesota teams, but these are the first two Poles. Possibly the proximity of the Poles was why it was so cold in the press box.

Solon One Strong Guy.

Minnesota used two quarter backs, two half backs, and one full back. Minnesota would have won the game if the quarter backs and half backs had stayed in the dressing room. This here Solon is enough of an attack to beat almost anybody's team. It says volumes for the strength of the Illini that they held this bird to one touchdown. I don't know whether he scored the touchdown against Illinois or not, but it's a cinch he at least carried the ball up to a point whence it was easy for some one else to score. If a coach had him and Pogue and Maulbetsch in the back field he wouldn't need even a set of signals.

Once yesterday Solon gained only four yards in one plunge and he got so mad at himself that he slapped his own face. The offense was not repeated.

The Gophers twice tried forward passes in the shadow of the Maroon goal. Both of them failed. They deserved to fail. A team that resorts to forward passing when it has Solon to plunge with is a fit subject for the bug commission.

Hamilton Also Stars.

There was a man named Hamilton on the Gopher team. He played one of the half backs, did the punting, and occasionally carried the ball. He carried it forward when he did carry it, and so had something on the Maroon backs. But the only reason he was given the ball was that he had forgotten to put on his heavy underclothing and kept getting cold. Otherwise Solon would have done all the work and the Gophers wouldn't have been robbed of two touchdowns by Father Time, for Solon advances much faster than Hamilton.

On Solon's showing yesterday he is entitled at least to honorable mention among the substitutes for the full back position on the all-conference team, and if Eckie doesn't give him said honorable mention I will see that he is suitably rewarded with a job on one of my all-star squads.

Long Run Upsets Chicago.

The Hamilton person did one spectacular thing that should be mentioned before it's forgotten. After the Maroons had braced on their half yard line in the first period and held Minnesota for downs, and after Des Jardien had punted out to the forty-five yard line, Hamilton got around Sparks' end for a dash of thirty yards. This was rather discouraging to the Maroons, who thought their anxious moments were over for a while. Hamilton's sprint put the ball fifteen yards from where it had been when the Maroon defense stiffened. It didn't stiffen this time. Three plunges by Solon and Minnesota had six points. Mayer, one of the Poles, failed to get the ball between the other poles on his try at goal.

Solon and company immediately started another parade but were halted by a fifteen yard penalty. They had to punt from the Chicago forty yard mark, and the punt went over the goal line for a touchback.

Pretty Kick by Des Jardien.

From scrimmage on the twenty yard mark Des Jardien got off the prettiest kick of the day, the only really long one. It sailed over the Gopher full back's head and went out of bounds on Minnesota's twenty-five. I should have inserted a paragraph before this one to let you know that the first period ended right after Minnesota's first touchdown and that Russell had gone in in place of Knipschild, who'd started at quarter back for the Maroons and distinguished himself by juggling a punt. Well, Hamilton tried to punt from Minnesota's twenty-five after Des Jardiens' long kick had sent it there Huntington—they say it was Huntington—broke through and blocked Hamilton's effort and Sparks fell on the ball for Chicago on the Gophers' twenty-seven. Two Maroon smashes were smashed and then came Russell's two forward heaves to Stageman. They netted over twenty yards, the two of them, and then Russell, throwing modesty to the winds, called on himself and plunged right through center for a touchdown. Schafer kicked the goal and the Maroons were a point ahead, but any one could see that they wouldn't be ahead at the finish unless something serious happened to Solon.

Gophers Block Punt.

A few minutes later Des Jardien was forced to try a punt from his own twenty. The Gophers, smarting under the disgrace of allowing Hamilton's kick to be blocked, came through in droves to spoil Des Jardien's. Baston got right in front of it and it sailed straight up in the air. The same Gopher caught it when it came down. He was thrown on the Chicago fifteen. A double pass—forward pass—worked nicely, and the ball was only four yards out. But right here Mr. Gardner looked at his watch. The half was over. The next play would have been Solon through guard, and goodness gracious knows he'd have scored.

Between the halves we wondered which side would next block a punt. The kickers were getting about as much protection as a depositor in a private bank. We also wondered why the Three Quarters club didn't pull some new stuff and when we heard the Harvard-Yale result what that Notre Dame fan would have to say now about comparative scores.

Russell Returns Forty Yards.

We were still wondering when the teams came out again. Russell's forty yard return of a punt put the Maroons in the game for the last time shortly after the third quarter started. On Minnesota's forty-five, Des Jardien had to punt, and a Minnesota back kindly dropped the ball. Chicago got it on the Gopher fifteen. The Maroon plungers were spilled, as usual. On the fourth down, with six or seven yards to gain, Russell tried his only play, the forward pass. It worked, but not for sufficient ground.

Minnesota punted and Russell made another pretty run back, this time for twenty-five yards. Again the Maroons were stopped, and again Des Jardien punted. The ball was not muffed, but the Chicago captain soon intercepted a Gopher pass and the ball was once more in Chicago's possession and for the last time close to the Gopher goal. One forward pass worked. The next went over the goal line for a touchback. The Gophers brought the ball out to their own twenty. And the rest of the story may be told in one word—Solon.

Two Kinds of Quists.

I might add another vital statistic—that Minnesota had a Quist and a Turnquist in the game at the same time.

I might also add that the Gophers broke training last night, and some of them quenched their thirst with aquavit, which, Paul Williams says, is the drink that inspired their forefathers to brave the raging seas.

O, yes, there was a crowd at that game, and each university had a band. And cheers were given. And Solon was just going over for another touchdown when that pesky head lineman, with his fast watch, horned in. After the game tea was served at the Alpha Delta house.

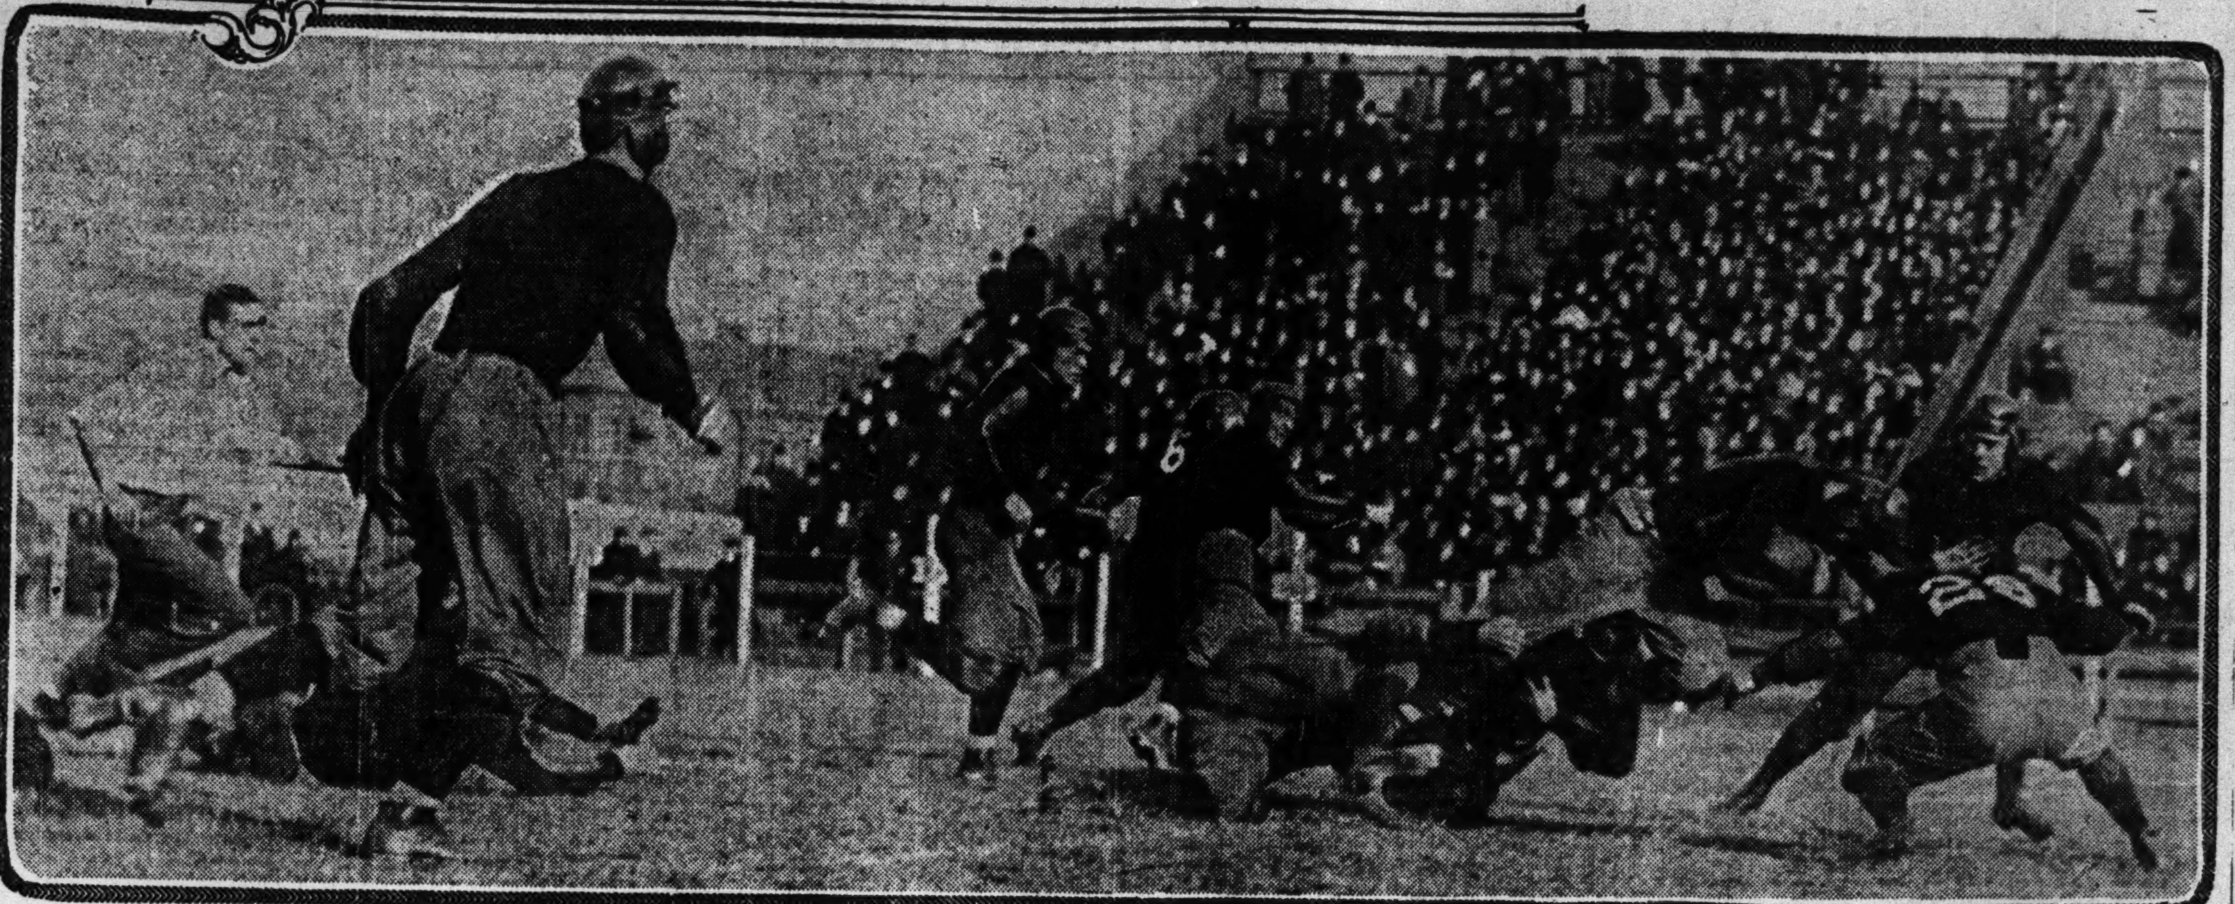
Solon, Minnesota's Great Full Back, Plunging Through the Maroon Line.



Notes of Maroon Game.

Minnesota's passing game was not a success. But Minnesota didn't need a passing game.

It is probable that Solon gained more ground in the shortest of those plunges of his in the fourth quarter than Schafer and Flood gained all afternoon.

Capt. Rosenthal wanted the time extended a bit in the fourth quarter so his team could score another touchdown, but the head lineman was not to be coaxed.

The Maroons might have gained more ground if Russell had called on himself earlier in the battle. Pete, however, had been ordered to keep out of it as much as possible.

The Gophers didn't play a brainy game in the first half. They probably would have scored at least one more touchdown if they had stuck to Solon instead of trying fancy stuff.

Part of the time the Gopher forwards were breaking through and stopping the Maroon backs before they got started. The rest of the time said backs got all the way up to the line of scrimmage before they were spilled.

Referee Masker had frequent conversations with the captains of the rival teams. We don't know what they were about, but they took up a lot of time. On one or two occasions the athletes seemed to be doing most of the talking, and the other officials should have rushed up to give masquerade.

When punts weren't blocked in the first half the punters were so hurried that their poor showing was excusable. That kick of Des Jardien's which went over the Minnesota full back's head and out of bounds in Gopher territory was the only really long one. In the second half the protection seemed to be better on both sides.

KANGAROO TEAM WINS BIKE RACE

Goullet and Granda Outpoint Rivals in New York 6 Day Grind.

NEW RECORD PUT UP.

New York, Nov. 21.—Alfred Goullet of Australia and Alfred Granda of Tasmania, the "Kangaroo team," won the six day bicycle race which ended at Madison Square garden tonight. Tied with five other teams for the lead an hour before the finish, they scored sixty-seven points, the highest number, in the final sprint of an hour. In this sprint the leader at the end of each fifteen laps was credited with six points, the second team with five points, and so on down to the last team, which received a credit of one point.

Iver Lawson and Peter Drobach, the Swedish-Polish team, were second with 61 points, Reggie McNamara of Australia and Jimmy Moran, of Chelsea, Mass., the international team, were third with 53 points; Francesco Verri of Italy and Oscar Egg of Switzerland, known as the Italian team, and Fred Hill of Boston and Joe Fogler of Brooklyn, whose title was the American team, tied for fourth place with 50 points each, while George Cameron and Harry Kaiser of New York, the Bronx team, finished last among the leading six with 34 points.

Edward F. Root of New York and Jackie Clark of Australia, the Australian-American team, and Percy Lawrence of San Francisco and Jake Magin of Newark, N. J., the interstate team were tied for seventh place, and were to ride to decide who should have the higher ranking, but Root and Clark forfeited, the interstate team winning seventh money.

The distance covered by Goullet and Grenda and the other leaders was 2,758 miles and 1 lap, setting a new world's record, seven miles and one lap ahead of the former mark of 2,751 miles, made last year by the victors in this year's race.

"Beaver Dam, Wis.—[To the Editor.]—Will you please tell me the proper score under the following circumstances? Our club has your book, but there is a dispute about this point. I bid 3 no trumps and was doubled, but made 5. I claimed 100 below the line, 50 for making the contract and 50 for each extra trick, making 150 above the line. One of my opponents claims I could get but 60 below the line and 150 above. Who is right? S. M."

Answer—The proper score was 100 below the line and 150 above, besides the score for honors, if any.

"Brookfield, Ill.—[To the Editor.]—Will you in our "T. F. C." advise if high, low, jack, game is called pitch or seven up? Also, has the five spot any special value in this game? F. S."

Answer—The game which you mean is seven-up. In pitch the trump is made by player at left of dealer, and in aucution pitch the players bid for trump. The five is of no especial value.

GOPHERS PROVE BEST RUNNERS IN CONFERENCE

Minnesota Wins Cross Country Event; Watson Breaks Record.

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Minnesota won the annual conference cross country run at Purdue university today. Watson of Minnesota was the first to cross the tape at the finish line, and his time, :26:21 for the five mile course, established a new Big Nine record and improved the old mark by twenty-three seconds. Watson also finished first in the cross country run last year. Minnesota's score in the run today was 45, the lowest score winning.

Gophers Easy Winners.

The event was contested by all the big nine universities and Ames college of Iowa. Minnesota won by a big margin. The other scores were as follows, arranged in the order the teams finished: Ames, 81; Illinois, 98; Ohio State, 116; Wisconsin, 124; Northwestern, 128; Chicago, 132; Purdue, 142; Iowa, 211; Indiana, 263.

Watson of Minnesota was the first man to finish. His time was :26:25 for the five miles, and it established a new record. Last year's time was :26:44. Mason of Illinois finished second, Griffin of Minnesota, third, and Merrill of Wisconsin, fourth.

Six Men in Teams.

Each team had six men, and it was necessary for five of them to finish in order to have the team qualify. The course lay over hilly roads and, although the weather was cold, the conditions for the most part were ideal for an endurance test.

The teams of the ten competing colleges were taken for an automobile ride over the course. They found it properly marked with guiding posts and flags. The finish line was directly in front of the grand stand on Stuart field. Indiana was handicapped by the sickness of Capt. Gray.

The first ten to finish were as follows: Watson, Minnesota; Mason, Illinois; Rapazz, Minnesota; Merrill, Wisconsin; Stout, Chicago; Wallace, Minnesota; Mackstad, Ames; Campbell, Chicago; Seder, Ames; Hedges, Wisconsin.

HARRISON TEAM AGAIN PLAYS TIE AGAINST BOWEN

"Prep" Elevens Meet for Second Time in the High School League Without Scoring.

BY KEENE GARDINER.

After battling for two full hours, meaning two complete games, Harrison and Bowen still hold the honor of holding each other scoreless. The first game, which was played in the southern section of the Chicago minor division early in October, ended 0 to 0, and when the teams had finished their schedules each had won two contests; therefore it was necessary to play off the tie to decide which team would meet Crane Tech, winner of the northern title. They met at Sherman park.

Each team had about two chances to score, but something went wrong in each instance. Once Harrison rushed the ball to the three yard line with the goal to gain on the fourth down. A forward pass was tried, but the ball struck the ground, resulting in a touchback. With less than thirty seconds to play Hollis tried a drop kick from the thirty yard line, but the ball swept wide of the goal posts by a foot.

Bowen Held for Downs.

Bowen also rushed the ball to the eight yard line, but was held for downs. Linder featured on the defensive for Harrison and Drea made the most ground for the opposition. Because of the tie the two teams may play again either Wednesday or Thursday to decide which will meet Crane on the following Saturday. Lineup:

Batavia rushed the visitors off their feet in the first period by scoring three touchdowns, but Proviso braced in the next two periods, during which only one marker was made. DE PAUL ANNEXES CATHOLIC TITLE

Academy Eleven Defeats St. Rita in Fast Finish by a Score of 23 to 6.

BY PREP.

De Paul academy clinched the Catholic High school football championship yesterday by playing just hard enough to beat St. Rita 23 to 6 in the latter's back yard. Not until the final session did the north siders open up, but when they did two touchdowns were chased across the goal posts. In the previous three quarters only straight, old fashioned football of the 1906 vintage was tried.

De Paul's reckless play led to St. Rita's only touchdown. Just ten seconds before the final whistle Coach Paupau's youngsters tried a triple pass. The second pass was completed when Reilly intercepted the ball and dashed sixty yards down the field for the marker. Outside of this one chance St. Rita was almost altogether on the defensive, gaining first down only twice.

After being held scoreless in the first period, De Paul started a line plunging game and carried it through so successfully that Manley went over in the second quarter. A safety added two more points in the third and touchdowns by Raab and Ward increased the total to twenty-three points. Lineup:

SOCCER GAME FOR CHARITY.

Scotland and Ireland will battle against England and Wales in the big soccer match which will be staged this afternoon at 2:30 at Fifty-second street and Cottage Grove avenue for the benefit of the British soldiers' widows and orphans fund. Bob Zuppke, Coach of Great Material Composing Big Nine Title Eleven.

BY HARVEY T. WOODRUFF.

BOB ZUPPKE

Coach Bob Zuppke has guided the University of Illinois football eleven of 1914 through the portals of the athletic hall of fame, whose sacred precincts have long been familiar to the Illini track, athletic, and baseball squads.

Winning conference baseball championships under the good natured but stern when necessary George Huff, and winning dual and conference track and field meets under the teaching of Harry Gill, became a habit in the early days of the Illinois athletic renaissance. But still the Illini were not satisfied. They wanted an undisputed football title—not like the one of 1910, shared by Minnesota, but a claim so clear that none could say them nay.

The Illini footballers of 1914 are conceded to be a great football aggregation—the best in the conference. Comparisons with other western teams or with teams of other years are profitless. It is sufficient for the Illini rooters to know they are the best in their class. And to Zuppke is given full measure of credit. He had great material—unusual back field material—and he made the most of it. So Zuppke is a popular fellow down Urbana way, where students and alumni are singing his praises.

When Coach Bob addressed the Chicago Illini club before the Northwestern game, on the occasion of a smoker rally, he told the alumni that he had a good team—far better than that of 1913, which he characterized as lucky rather than great. He expressed a belief the Illini would win the Chicago game. I heard his speech. His talk was convincing. He was confident, but not overconfident.

That was the spirit Zuppke instilled into his charges. It is fashionable in football circles for coaches to be lugubrious before a big game to arouse the fighting spirit of their men. "Zup" knew the orthodox theory, but he also knew the tradition of Illinois defeat at the hands of Chicago—defeat so persistent that it came to be called "Chicago luck" at Urbana.

Zuppke knew that Illinois had won only three games and tied one out of a total of eighteen played in the athletic history of the two schools. Perhaps he did not remember who was responsible for the Illini victory of 1892, the year the University of Chicago opened. He did remember the great Jake Stahl, who was largely responsible for the downfall of the Maroons in 1901, and he remembered the toe of Otto Seiler, whose field goal was the only score of the 1910 contest.

Therefore Zuppke sought to impress on his men not only that Chicago could be beaten but that Chicago would be beaten. His coaching was psychological as well as physical. Possibly he risked overconfidence after the Minnesota victory, but he chose the risk rather than a fear of the Maroon. His theory was justified, for the Illini scored all their twenty-one points after the Maroons had registered the first touchdown.

Looking to the future, both Zuppke and the Illini ought to be satisfied. The coach has shown he has brains for football strategy, while the athletic material at Illinois is better than at any time in its history. The school has grown by leaps and bounds within the last decade. Possibly it has advanced faster than any other middle western university. The state legislature has been liberal financially in its determination to make the university worthy of the state. Its increased enrollment is the answer, and increased enrollment means additional athletic material.

So much for the situation at Illinois. Now for a little about Zuppke. "Zup" never made his name as a great football player. Perhaps he would have been a Pogue or a Clark if he had been an undergraduate in the time of the present open game and the forward pass. But Zuppke was a candidate for the University of Wisconsin eleven in the days when weight was needed. He made the freshman eleven, then tried for the varsity for three years, but was so light that he never became a regular. He was a plucky youngster and fought far harder than his weight. It is said at Madison that he holds the intercollegiate record for visits to the college infirmary.

Zuppke took his degree from Wisconsin in 1905, then attended art classes in New York City. He accepted a position in the fall of 1906 with the Muskegon (Mich.) High school as instructor and football coach. Four years of athletic success at Muskegon were followed by his engagement at Oak Park, which became at once a national figure in preparatory school football, beating the best teams in Chicago and vicinity and taking victorious trips to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, losing only one game in three years. It was variations of the "gee haw" and "flea flicker" plays used at Oak Park which defeated the Maroons.

Zuppke is 33 years old. He is married. He likes football and he likes his job at Illinois. With the season ended, Zuppke is satisfied. So is Illinois.

BIG SCORE MADE BY CLINTON

Clinton, Ia., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Although playing its poorest game of the season, Clinton ran up a score of 73 to 0 against Dubuque. Fifty-two points were made in the second half, when the regulars went in. Dubuque tackled hard and Loetscher starred with his general play and a sixty-five yard run from the kick-off. Morphew dislocated a shoulder. Murphy, Kline, Vorwick, and Berrien starred on offense, while Slater and Ingworsen spoiled Dubuque's scoring attempts. Ingworsen, center, scored two touchdowns.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 21.—In a game marked by numerous errors, the All-Nationals defeated the All-Americans, 4 to 2, today. Tesreau, pitching for the Nationals, held the losers to four hits. The touring teams will wind up their visit with two games here tomorrow and will leave Tuesday for Honolulu. Score:

PURDUE'S SPURT WINS HARD GAME

Boilermakers Down Indiana by 23 to 13 in Final Period Struggle.

Lafayette, Ind., Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Purdue found Indiana a most stubborn foe this afternoon, and it was not until the final period that the Boilermakers managed to win a victory. The final score was 23 to 13. At times Indiana seemed to have the better of the argument, and the Crimson backs tore through the Gold and Black forward wall for repeated gains.

Purdue scored two touchdowns in the first period on line smashes and brilliant runs by Vanaken and Abrell. Indiana managed to score just before the quarter ended by crashing line bucks by McIntosh and Capt. Erehart. The half ended with the score 13 to 6 in Purdue's favor, no score being done in the second quarter.

In the third quarter neither side scored, but soon after the fourth opened Indiana made a touchdown, Capt. Erehart getting away on the first play and running seventy yards for a touchdown. When A. Erehart kicked goal it tied the score, 13 to 13.

Indiana Gains Through Line.

The Boilermakers seemed to be weakening and Indiana crashed through the line again and again, but finally Purdue braced and entered the game with renewed vigor. Abrell and O'Brien carried the ball forward and finally Pultz made a beautiful field goal by a drop kick from the forty yard line, the ball sailing squarely between the posts. This gave Purdue a three point lead and infused new life into the team. The back field acquired speed and soon carried the ball into Indiana territory. Each time the Crimson got the ball its backs would be thrown for losses by Blocker, Routh, Abrell, and East.

Purdue's forward pass of twenty yards, Abrell to Eldridge, gave them a third touchdown and Abrell kicked goal. There was no further scoring, although Indiana tried desperately to make another touchdown.

Purdue Plays Streaky Game.

The Purdue team played a streaky game, and at times was brilliant in its attacks, but its defense was tame, especially in the first and fourth quarters. For Indiana M. Erehart, Krause, and McIntosh were the stars on the offensive. For Purdue Abrell, Vanaken, O'Brien, and Pultz starred.

The crowd was the largest that ever assembled on Stuart field, numbering 10,000, including 1,200 rooters from Indiana. There were 1,000 Purdue alumni in attendance, special trains being run from different cities. Purdue was expected to win rather easily, but the Crimson eleven showed greatly improved form.

TINKER RETURNS FROM TRIP.

Manager Tinker of the Chifeds returned yesterday from a brief but eventful hunting trip along the Illinois river, in company with Frank Houseman. Although game was not overplentiful, the party had one or two good days' hunting before the jaunt was cut short by fire, which threatened to destroy their log cabin. The shack was saved through Tinker's unsuspected ability as a fireman, but as it started from the fireplace nobody cared to risk a holocaust by building another fire, and it was too cold to stick around without any artificial heat. Tinker said he knew nothing about war or peace plans, but would begin at once shaping up the Tinx for another campaign.

In the Wake of the News

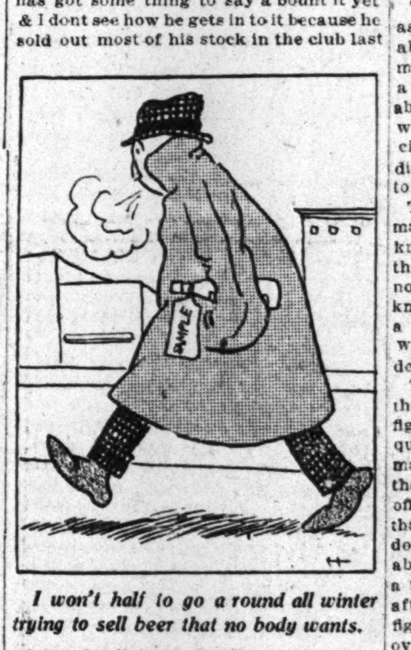
Bill to Steve.

[Copyright: 1914: By Ring W. Lardner.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—Steve. Well Steve it beggins to look like as though your old pal would be on a real world's champions club next yr. & I supose you been reading the papers & know whats going on up here so you will know what am I getting at. There going to sell the Cubs to this here chas. Weegman & the deal will be put threw as soon is the federals has there meeting & hes the man that owns the federals club here but he aint going to have 2 clubs but will com bine the 2 & make 1 club out of them & I guess it will be some club. The place where the Cubs was so rotten last yr. was there pitchers & part of there infield & there hole outfield & when the Cubs & the federals gets to gather the Cubs will have this here Hendrix & Johnson & Brennan to go a long with what they got & them 3 combined with Cheney & Vaughn & 1 or 2 others should ought to be some pitching corpse. & then of corse they will keep Saier at 1 base & may be move Zimmerman to 2 base & have Tinker at short stop & this here Zeider at 3 base and then they will play I & Zwilling & flack in the outfield & I guess that wont be some come by nation eh Steve. Of corse you will say how do I know there going to play me in the outfield & I got good reason for knowing it or else I wouldent say so. In the 1st. place this here Tinkers a smart man & knows better then to keep a man like I on the bench & an other reason for me knowing it is a friend of mine thaat knows this here Weegman seen him the other night & ast him was he going to buy the Cubs & he says yes & then my frend ast him was they a chance of me playing reglar & he says sure theys a chance for very body so you see he herd a bout me & probly knows I will make good if gave a fare show. It looks like we would play over to the north side insted of where we been playing on the west side & I seen that north side all ready & I guess I & Vic Saier wont hit some out of the pk. over there. If Tinker dont play no favruts but plays the best men on the 2 teams we will win the penant sure & then I will cut in on the big dough & wont half to go a round all winter trying to sell beer that they aint no body wants to buy & I wouldent of never herd of it only for my girls father makeing it.



I won't half to go a round all winter trying to sell beer that no body wants.

The deal is practally all closed up now for Weegman to buy the Cubs but they wont be nothing gave out a bout it till the federals has there meeting & then it will be gave out. But its all fixed up now all ready that is all eccept geting the con sent of the people that owns the Cubs. Gary Herman has fixed it all up & when he gets evry thing settled he will probly tell the owners of the Cubs a bount it & supprise them. From what I here theys only a little diffrents in price thats bothering them now & Weegman wants to pay $550,000 dollars & the men that owns the club wants $850,000 dollars but they should ought to fix that up with out no truble because Gary Hermans a pretty good fellow & wont haggle over no small amt. like that espeshally when its some body else club that hes selling. It come out a little wile a go that chas. W. Murphy has got some thing to say a bount it yet & I dont see how he gets in to it because he sold out most of his stock in the club last winter & all hes got left of it is 51 per cent. He sold all the rest of it that he owned & the only thing hes kicking a bout is that they dident pay him nothing when they bought it off of him but said they would pay him latter on & he should ought to know that there word is good because there all frends of his that he sold it to. Then all they got to do after Gary Herman & Weegman agrees on a price is fix it up so as all the rest of the federals is took care of & they shouldent ought to be no truble a bout that because theys only 10 or 11 of them all to gather & they would probably be willing to drop out untirely for 5 or 6 hunderd thousand dollars a peace. So you see Steve evry things practally setteld & will be gave out a bout the 1 of Dec. & then they wont be no federal league no more but will just be the 2 big leagues like they was before & men like I will have all the best of it because the 2 big leagues will be to fast for them old timers to stick in it. It will be a good chance to get more money to because I will show Weegman where hes going to make a hole lot more money in the National league then he made in the federal & can a ford to give the players better salary. He will half to give me more then Im gting or I will tell him to jump in the lake & I will quit playing ball & may be go in to the real state game or buy a moveing pitcher show. Well Steve you can follow the papers & tell pretty near as much a bout it as I know but when I here som thing deaf nit I will let you know. The little girls had some pitchers took & I will send you 1 to show the boys so as they can see my speed in the skirt league but I guess they know that all ready eh Steve. Respy. BILL.

P. S. I was to busy to read the papers the last couple days or other wise I would not of wrote you this letter because just now wile I was writeing this letter I found out that evry things been called off a bout Weegman buying the club and he aint going to buy no club and Bresnahans been apointed mgr. of the club so I will be in right any way because Bresnahan is a smart man like Tinker & any way if he dont give me no square deel I can jump to the federal & Im glad theys still going to be a federal so as I can jump some wheres if I want to.

JIMMY JOHNSTON WISE PROMOTER; AFTER BIG GAME

Besides Staging Stellar Bouts He Also Manages Two Leading Boxers.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

Jimmy Johnston, the man who became boss of Madison Square Garden Boxing club in New York when Billy Gibson stepped out a short time ago, is a "wise bird" when it comes to things pugilistic. No one really knew who he was until the Frawley law went into effect, a little more than three years ago, in the state of New York. Since that time Johnston has been doing things with such speed that it was only natural that he would get to the front.

Although Johnston is everything from the head to the heel in boxing in Gotham he still has a couple of boxers under his wing. Both of them are Britons. One is Harry Stone, whom the Madison Square Garden boss thinks is classy enough to give anybody a real mill in the lightweight ranks. Another is "Kid" Lewis, a boy who, Johnston claims, chased World's Champion Freddie Welsh out of Great Britain. Of course all of this may be taken, or not, according to the way people look at it; but the fact that Johnston is a manager of a couple of boxers is mentioned simply to show that the New Yorker is a busy "bird."

Here to Sign Packey.

Johnston was in Chicago a few days ago, making the trip from Gotham with the express purpose of signing Packey McFarland for a contest with Champion Welsh. Up his sleeve he had another proposition to present to Packey in case the latter "couldn't see" a bout with Welsh. That other proposition was a battle with McFarland and Mike Gibbons, the St. Paul "phantom," as the principals.

As showing the wisdom of Johnston, it is only necessary to state that he didn't make the trip west with a single barreled gun to fire at McFarland. He felt pretty sure that Packey, who has taken on enough weight to carry him out of the regular lightweight class, the division in which the simon pure talent can make 133 pounds, would be willing to accept his offer of a mill with Welsh if the latter would hunch the notch two or three pounds and make the time for weighing in at 3 o'clock. Packey showed that he was willing enough to battle Welsh by announcing that he would fight the champion at 136 pounds, weigh in at 3 o'clock.

Favors 136 Pound Weight.

There is no doubt, even among close associates of McFarland, that this is about the best figure that Packey can make, for he has been out of action for a long time and has taken on considerable avoirdupois. Johnston was satisfied with McFarland's 136 pound plan, especially in view of the fact that Packey did not look with favor on a proposition to battle Gibbons at 145 pounds.

The clinching of the Welsh-McFarland match seems a certainty, for Johnston knows that Welsh wants all the work that he can get in the ring. Welsh will not quibble over a couple of pounds and knock himself out of a chance to pick up a big chunk of coin, such as the bout would draw at the Madison Square Garden gate.

"The fighters who will quibble over the division of the purse and prevent a fight because the weight figure doesn't quite suit them make me laugh," remarked Johnston. "Every time they pull that kind of stuff they simply are biting off their own noses. They seem to think that a fighter can last indefinitely. They don't wise up to the real fact that the ability of a battler to stay on top is really a matter of only three or four years. So after they acquire a title, some of these fighters waste time and money quibbling over the terms for a fight, when, if they went into action, they could enlarge their bank rolls by many dollars."

Welsh is one of the boys who cannot afford to let any chance to garner the coin get away from him. He got to the front principally through his great cleverness, and it took him a matter of eight years to get there, at that. The lightweight champion the next time he celebrates a birthday will be 29 years old, which in these times is considered pretty old for a title holder.

Much Work for Welsh.

The Briton's manager, Harry Pollok, is one of the few managers who look on things in the way that Johnston does. Pollok is going right along scheduling matches for Welsh just as quickly as the promoters offer them. There is evidence of this in the fact that the champion last Thursday fought his fourth battle in less than a month when he tackled Jimmy Duffy in a Buffalo ring. Pollok and Welsh know that Welsh will not always be a champion, and they also know that as soon as Freddie loses the title it will be hard to find the "soft money" that they are picking up at the present time.

There may be some who will criticise the "game" that Pollok picks out for the champion. He may select the "soft ones" for a time, in preference to the hard ones, but Pollok does not mean to sidetrack any one in the lightweight ranks as long as there is a chance to get the money. Charley White, the Chicago boy who fought the champion a draw in a Milwaukee ring on Nov. 9, will get another chance, and so will Willie Ritchie of San Francisco, from whom Welsh took the title in London last summer.

There have been a few fighters who have been known to "hog" the money market. These millers accept every opportunity presented to glean the "iron men." One of them is Willie Ritchie, the former title holder.

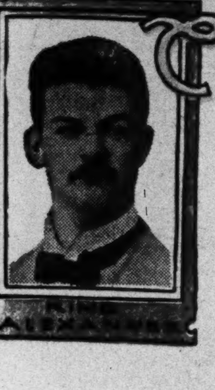
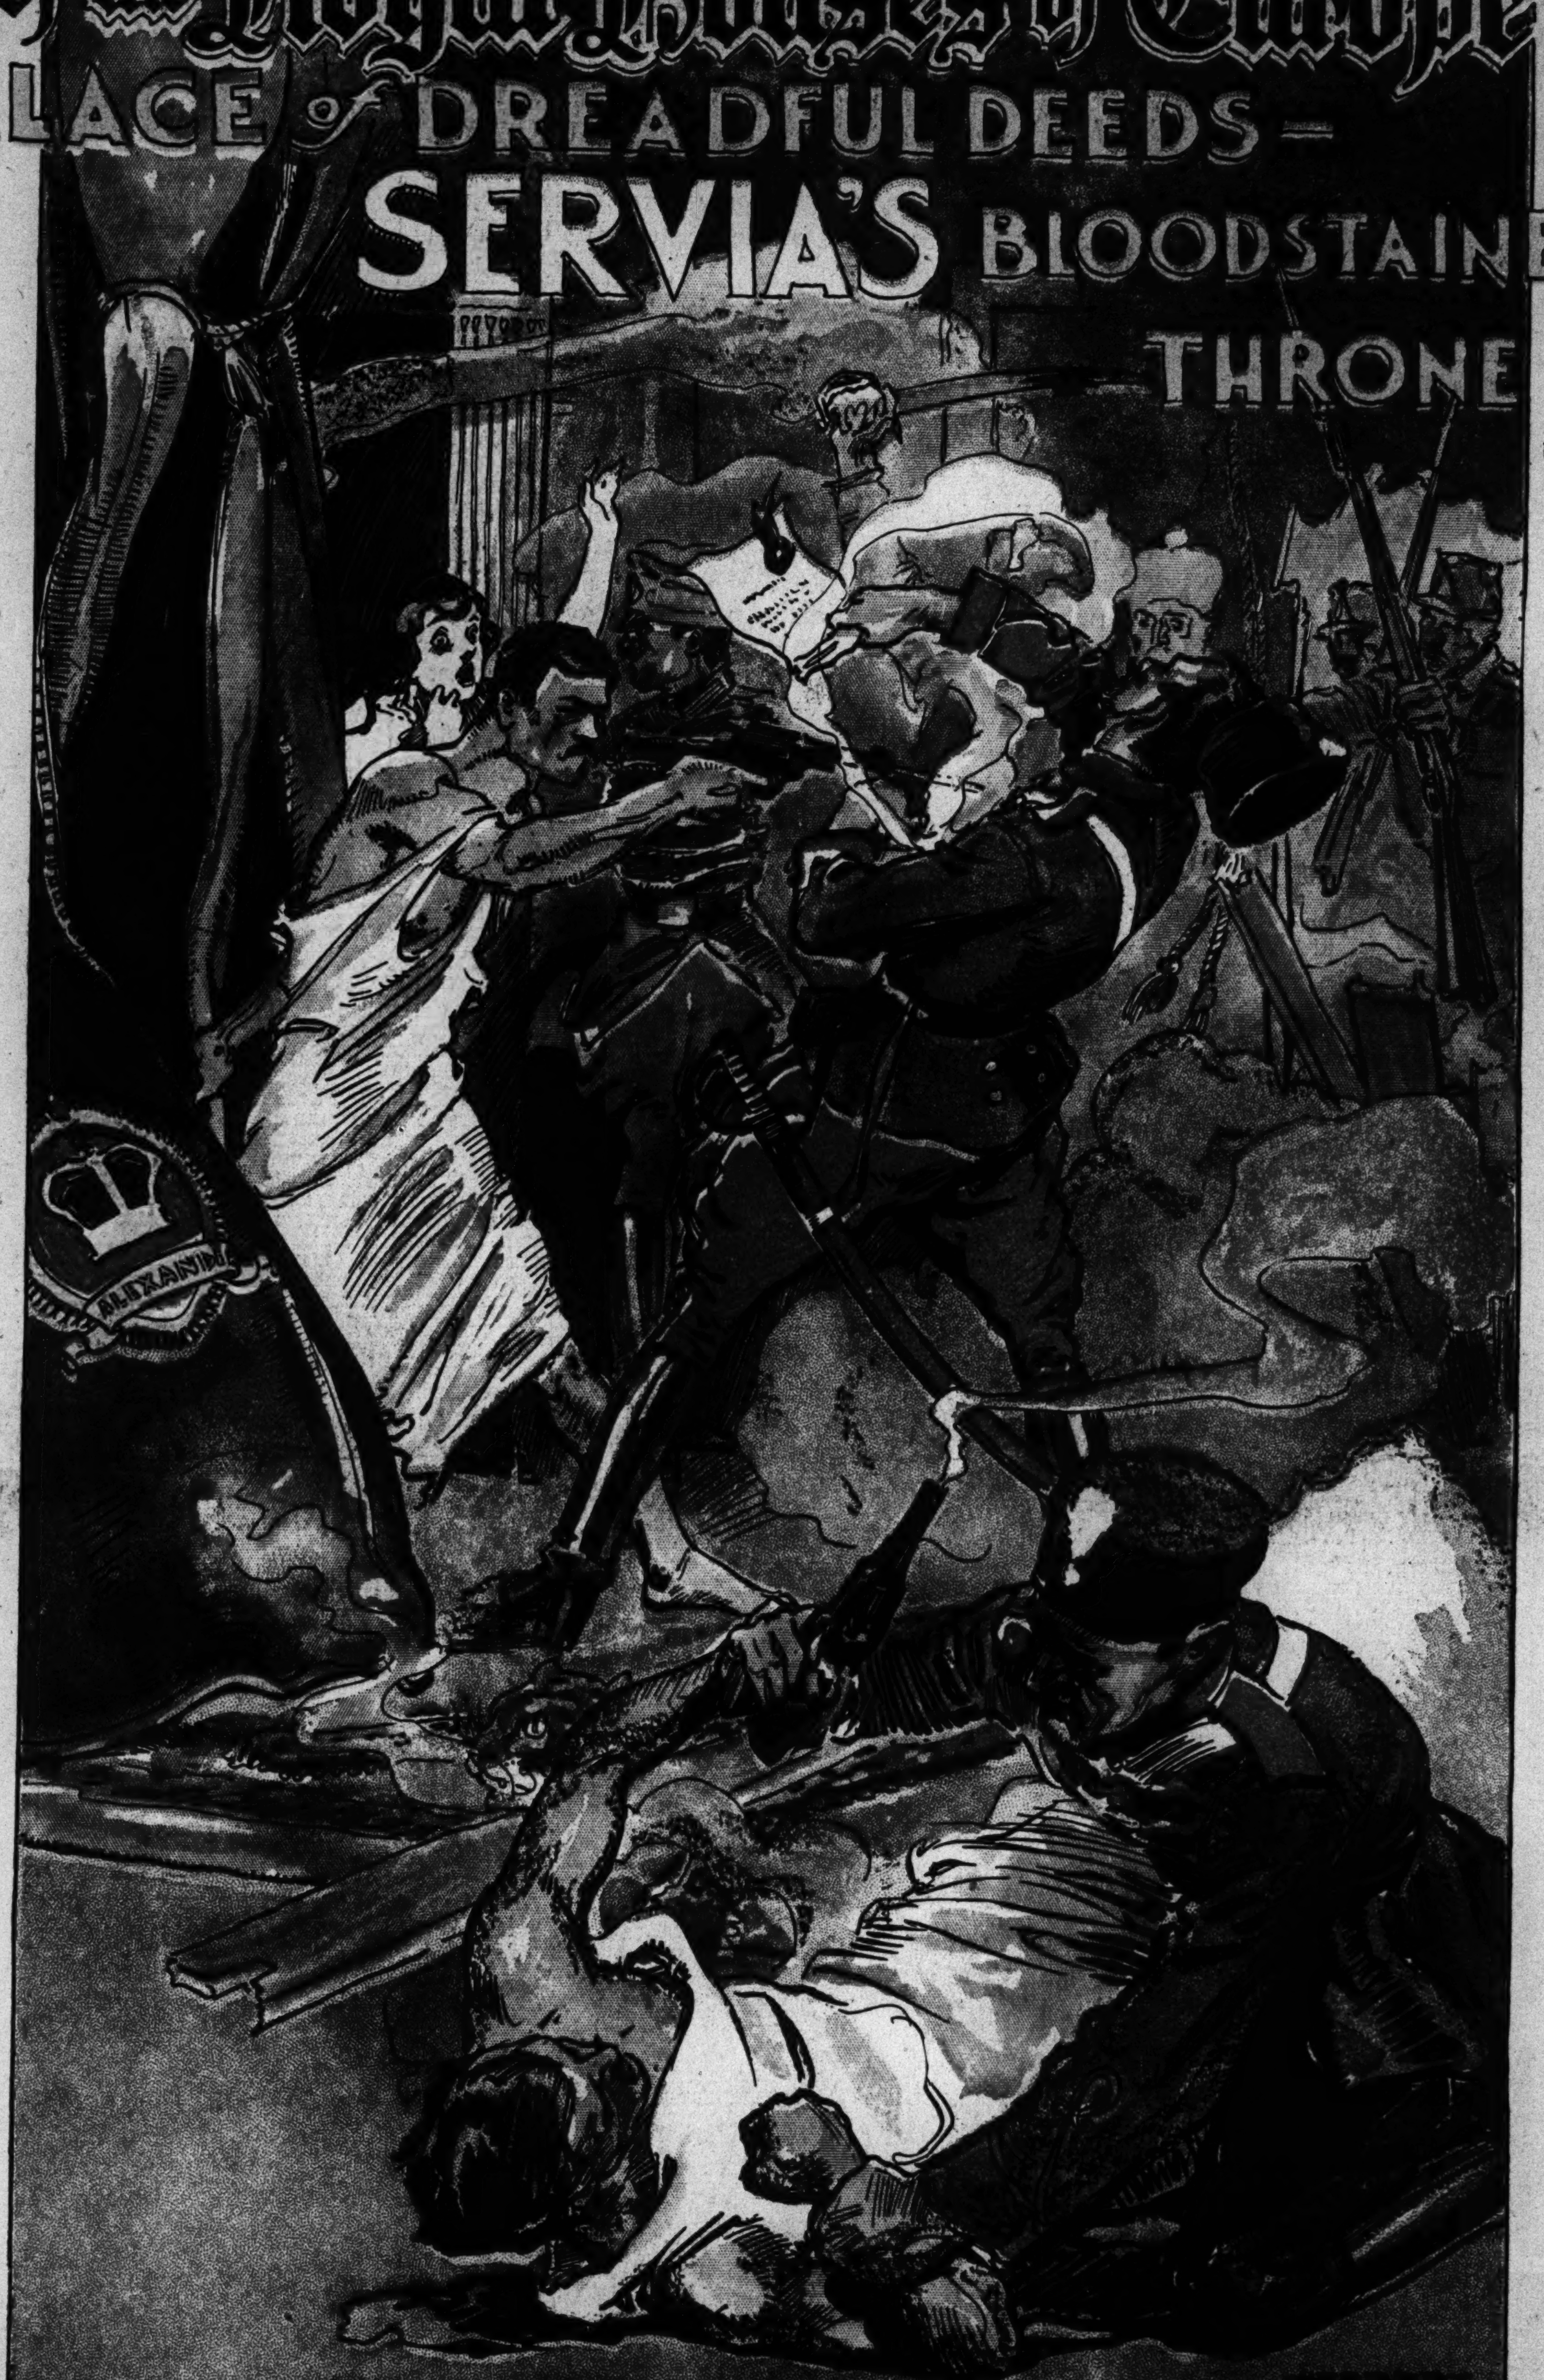
History of the Royal Houses of Europe

The PALACE of DREADFUL DEEDS – SERVIA'S BLOODSTAINED THRONE



KING ALEXANDER



"---THE SPEAKER FELL DEAD. THE KING HAD SHOT HIM."

KING PETER

BY HERBERT CAXTON.

[Copyright: 1914: By Herbert Caxton.]

BLOOD has stained the throneroom at Belgrade for much more than a century. The royal palace of Servia's capital has been the scene of dissension and bloodshed that befit a mediæval dynasty rather than that of a modern reigning house of Europe. Murder, assassination, and scandal have marked the passing and coming of successive kings and queens. The present monarch, King Peter, has never cleared himself of charges of complicity in the dreadful scenes which attended the putting to death of the last king and queen eleven years ago the last summer, and it was not until several years after his accession to the bloodstained throne that Great Britain and other countries consented to acknowledge him as having a right to the place.

The two rival branches of Servia's so-called royal family, the Obrenovitches and the Karageorgevitches, are of the commonest origin, the former descending from a swineherd and the latter, to which King Peter belongs, from a peasant, Peter's ancestor, Kara (black) George, who united Servia.

After Milosh Obrenovitch had freed Servia from the Turks he reigned as prince until 1837. Being deposed by Russian influence, he was succeeded by his son, Michael, who, in turn, had to give way to Alexander Karageorgevitch. Milosh was recalled and reigned until his death in 1860. Michael again came into power, but was murdered in 1868 by the Karageorgevitches. His son, Milan, then was called to the throne.

He was only 14 years of age, a headstrong, badly educated youth. In 1875 he married Natalie, the daughter of a Russian colonel named Kescke. She was a beautiful woman, but wayward like Milan. Almost immediately their marital troubles became the scandal of European courts. Milan's amours were notorious, and those of his queen quite kept pace with them.

Draga Becomes Power at Court.

Among the retainers of Queen Natalie was Mme. Draga Maschin, the widow of an unsuccessful engineer. She was the daughter of a colonel named Pauta, said to be of an ancient Viovode family of the Lunjevizas. She had a daughter 16 years old at the time.

At the time she married Maschin she is said to have been quite illiterate, but as he was an educated man and she was ambitious, she set about to acquire not only an education but polish. She succeeded completely, and in a few years she was able to speak and write French and German fluently and to play the piano with considerable skill. The Maschins moved to Belgrade not long after Natalie came there as queen, and the engineer's wife soon made her way at court, because at that time there were few educated men or women there.

It was not long before she attracted the attention of both king and queen, and on M. Maschin's death she succeeded in securing an appointment as a lady in waiting to the queen. Natalie and she became great friends. So did she and Milan, but of this the queen knew nothing. In fact, so well did Mme. Maschin play her cards that she was soon not only the king's favorite, but she had more influence with him than his ministers did. She ministered to the king's low tastes and encouraged him in his extravagances and debaucheries. At one time he imported a whole corps de ballet from Vienna. She made hay while the sun shone and amassed a large fortune.

Alexander Proclaimed King.

Meanwhile the king and queen became unbearable to each other and the conduct of Milan was such that a break came and he banished her from the country. She fled to Germany, taking with her her little son Alexander, born in 1876. By this time the Servians began a revolt against Milan and demanded the return of the prince. Natalie would not give him up, but Draga Maschin for a large sum went to Germany, kidnaped the prince, and brought him to Belgrade. After a time Milan allowed Natalie to return. There was a reconciliation for a time, but presently the cat and dog life was resumed. The feeling against Milan became so strong that in 1889 he abdicated in favor of his son. He also divorced his wife. The decree was subsequently annulled. The couple twice separated, but were reconciled. In 1893 Alexander on reaching his majority was proclaimed king. A regency had existed for four years.

As might be expected, Alexander was a worthy son of such parents. Before he was out of his teens he had a reputation for profligacy which would have shamed a much older man. The parents had tried to negotiate a marriage for him with several princesses, German, Russian, Montenegrin, and others, but his reputation was already so notorious that they failed. Natalie had even tried to make a match for him with the daughter of a relative, Col. Konstantinovitch, a wealthy Servian, but King Alexander would have none of her.

Banishes Both His Parents.

While at Biarritz with Mme. Maschin the queen discovered that an affair existed between the lady in waiting and the king. Furious, she dismissed Mme. Maschin, only on her return to Belgrade to find that Alexander had installed his mistress in a sumptuous apartment not 200 feet from the palace. When the news of this went broadcast all chance of Alexander's making a royal match was over. Both Milan and Natalie tried to argue with him, but to no end. He laughed at them and cited their own conduct in his defense.

They sent out spies and from Vienna and elsewhere they caused to be circulated stories most damaging to Mme. Maschin's reputation. The most disgraceful conduct was attributed to her, and the scandalmongers of Belgrade added to these stories until the object was made to seem the most infamous of women.

In spite of all this the affair continued and Alexander banished both his parents from the country. In 1900 he announced his intention of marrying the woman. When taunted with her low birth he said that he himself was descended from a man who herded hogs. He kept his word and made Draga his queen. The next year his father died an exile in Vienna. A natural son of Milan, by Mme. Artemesia Christitch, wife of the Servian minister to Turkey, afterward set up a claim to the throne, but no attention was paid to this.

The marriage of Alexander was not recognized by the courts of Europe for some time after it took place, but as he finally desisted in trying to secure an invitation for himself and Draga to visit St. Petersburg and elsewhere the matter was dropped.

Country on Verge of Anarchy.

Draga's triumph was now complete. After bleeding the country through the father she had now married the son and reigned as queen. Her husband's parents, who had opposed her, had both been banished. Milan died penniless in Vienna and Natalie was a discredited wanderer among the courts of Europe. Parliament and ministers had opposed the marriage, and against these the queen now directed her vengeance. One of these men, Col. Bogdanovitch, she had dragged from his home and shot. Her influence over Alexander was such that she had him dismiss the ministry, suspend the constitution of 1901, and repeal certain laws. He revived an old constitution under which the king had infinitely more power. The country by this time was on the verge of anarchy. The feeling against Draga was more bitter even than that against the king.

The married life of the royal pair thus began inauspiciously and it was doomed to be tragic to the end.

One cause of dissension was her failure to produce an heir. It is said that she tried to palm off a son of her sister as her own child, but the king, seeing through the plot, accused her of the deception, and the queen in despair took poison, but was restored by the court physician. The king was furious. He threatened to divorce her, to abdicate, or to adopt a peasant's child as an heir.

The queen's extravagances in view of the depleted treasury of the country formed another scandal. Her costumes and jewels rivaled those of the great queens of Europe. Besides the money she caused Alexander to extort from the people by taxes she was said to enjoy large incomes from Vienna and St. Petersburg for the political intrigues she carried on in favor of those courts. The feeling of revolt grew every day in court, military, and political circles. The foreign ministries of Russia, Austria, and Germany watched eagerly each step of the drama which was playing itself out in Belgrade, but in Geneva an old man with a hawklike face and a sinister eye watched more eagerly than any.

Spies Report to Peter.

This was Prince Peter Karageorgevitch, the representative of the nonreigning family. Code telegrams sped from his spies in Belgrade to Peter in Switzerland. There was nothing which went on in the capital of Servia of which he did not know as soon as it happened. Not a day passed that he did not receive a fat letter from Belgrade. A wily old man, Peter. What is he plotting? What does all this correspondence mean? Who are his friends in Servia and what are they doing?

At 2 o'clock in the morning of June 11, 1903, at Belgrade, the Sixth infantry, headed by Col. Naumovitch and Col. Maschin, a brother of Queen Draga's first husband, marched silently through the streets to the door of the palace. There they were joined by several men, officials and civilians. Other corps of soldiers were posted in the streets leading to the palace and in other parts of the city where opposition might show itself. No police were visible. They were controlled by the conspirators.

At the gates the palace guards were overpowered. Entrance was easily effected. Guards were then placed at every door with orders to shoot any one who resisted. Inside some attendants tried to escape. The soldiers killed them with their bayonets.

One of the first who was attracted by the noise was the queen's youngest brother.

As he rushed out to question the intruders he was shot dead. By this time Col. Naumovitch blew open the door of the king's room with a bomb and then rushed in, followed by Col. Mischics and Maj. Lasarovitch.

Couple Flees to Palace Roof.

In the middle of the room stood King Alexander in his night clothes, a revolver in his hand.

To him Naumovitch presented a paper.

"Sign this!" he said to the king. It was a banishment of Draga. "If you do not do so you must abdicate." The next second the speaker fell dead. The king had shot him.

A door opened and with a scream Queen Draga sprang into the room, and at almost the same time there entered Col. Maschin, fighting with another brother of the queen. Maschin finally shot the other dead.

At this Alexander and Draga caught hold of hands and rushed from the apartment, making for the roof of the palace. After them came the leaders, followed by the soldiery. The royal fugitives fled from room to room in the dark, slamming the doors behind them as they ran. Shots, screams, and shouts resounded through the palace as the pursuit went on.

At last Alexander and Draga gained the roof, and there in the darkness the couple made their last stand. They were not to wait long. There the pursuers found them, the queen kneeling in terror behind her husband. One of the conspirators, who it was is not known, shot and instantly killed the king.

As he fell the others rushed up and poured shot after shot into his body and that of the queen. Both were dead in a few minutes after they had been overtaken on the roof.

Their bodies were carried downstairs and thrown out of a window into a courtyard.

With the king and queen were buried in the same obscure way her two brothers, Gen. L. Petrovitch, minister of war, and Gen. Zingar Markovitch, the premier, both of whom were seized in their homes by other conspirators and brutally slain.

Peter Leaves for Belgrade.

In Geneva, when he received news that the house of Obrenovitch had been wiped out in blood, Prince Peter went straight to a gun shop and bought a revolver. The next thing he bought was a ticket to Belgrade. Before going, however, he had a conference with the Russian consul.

Peter had lived in Geneva quietly since 1891. It is said that he was supported by the Russian government. At the time of his accession he was 58 years of age. He had been educated at the French military academy at St. Cyr. In 1867 he joined the foreign legion and during the Franco-Prussian war he fought with distinction and attained the rank of captain.

He was married to a daughter of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, but she died after giving birth to two sons, George and Alexander, and a daughter, Helen. She brought with her a large dowry, but the income from it goes only to her sons.

It is said on good authority that the people were strong for a republic, but the army leaders decided for a monarchy, and that settled it. They made no objection, however, to the constitution of 1888 as a basis of the new bill of rights which the assembly adopted and which was a comparatively liberal one.

A few days later Peter was formally elected by the scuptschina and inducted into office with due ceremony. It was noted, however, that the popular demonstrations were mechanical in character. The cheers and applause were those of a hired claque.

Peter Vexed by Crazy Son.

Peter's most serious trouble was with his son, Prince George, the heir apparent. Either by inheritance or by his education in Russia George had attained habits which attracted wide attention in Europe. Insanity and degeneracy, the joint products of royalty, distinguished his conduct from the day he returned from St. Petersburg. One of his first acts was to kick a valet so severely that the man died a few days afterward in the hospital.

George had sent the man to post a letter. Suspecting him, he had him followed. The letter was never posted. The man lied and said it was. The prince flew at him and kicked him down stairs. Added to George's other shortcomings was an ungovernable temper. Neither his father nor any of the ministers had the slightest authority over him. He completely lacked self-control.

Riding his bicycle up to the palace gate and finding it locked, he forced his machine violently against the obstruction, smashing the bicycle and falling over the handlebars. Getting up, he rushed at an officer who was coming to his assistance and struck him in the face. The officer promptly returned the blow, whereupon the prince drew a revolver and shot at the man, but missed him.

One of his favorite occupations was to sit in his room and shoot holes in the walls and ceiling. His military tutor refused to put up with his conduct and returned to Paris. George in a rage struck a hostler with a whip, cutting out an eye.

He did not neglect the fair sex. He fell under the spell of Mme. Desanka Gyorgyevits, an actress at Belgrade. She had been the wife of a Servian diplomat, but had eloped with a man, who then deserted her. She went to Vienna, studied for the stage, and, as she was pretty, had no trouble in securing engagements. At Belgrade George was in his box every night to see her. He began making gifts to her, but Papa Peter put a stop to that. Then he fled with her to Vienna, where they led a gay life until Peter's agents found him and carried him back to Belgrade. Two nights later the actress' dead body stabbed in many places was found in a wood.

It was not long before George broke loose again. He gathered up a corps of dancing girls and had them conveyed to the palace when the royal family was supposed to be asleep. Through the back door he took them into the very throneroom itself. This he caused to be lighted up, a table was brought in with a midnight luncheon which largely consisted of champagne. He had performed a mock ceremony, in which one of the girls crowned him king and then poured a bottle of wine on his head. The party then joined hands and circled about the room singing. The guards interposed then, but the gay party chased them out of the palace and went dancing down the street.

Brother Made Heir Apparent.

George's madness now rapidly became worse. He threatened to kill his father. He tried to shoot a soldier who refused to bite off the head of a mouse the prince had caught. He used to bury cats up to their necks in sand and then stamp upon them till they were dead. He took to sitting in a window with an air gun shooting at passersby.

This state of affairs went on until 1909, when, on March 27, the father compelled the resignation of his son and the younger brother, Alexander, was proclaimed heir apparent in his place. This gave great satisfaction to the Servian people, for Alexander to all appearances is a sane and healthy man with intellectual tastes and a great favorite in court and civilian circles.

Peter on his inauspicious accession was shunned by the other rulers, but during his reign he has succeeded partly in removing the feeling of repulsion which was felt against him. He has proved a good ruler for Servia, and in the two wars of 1912-'13 he conducted his affairs in a highly creditable manner. For one thing he has had remarkably astute advisers.

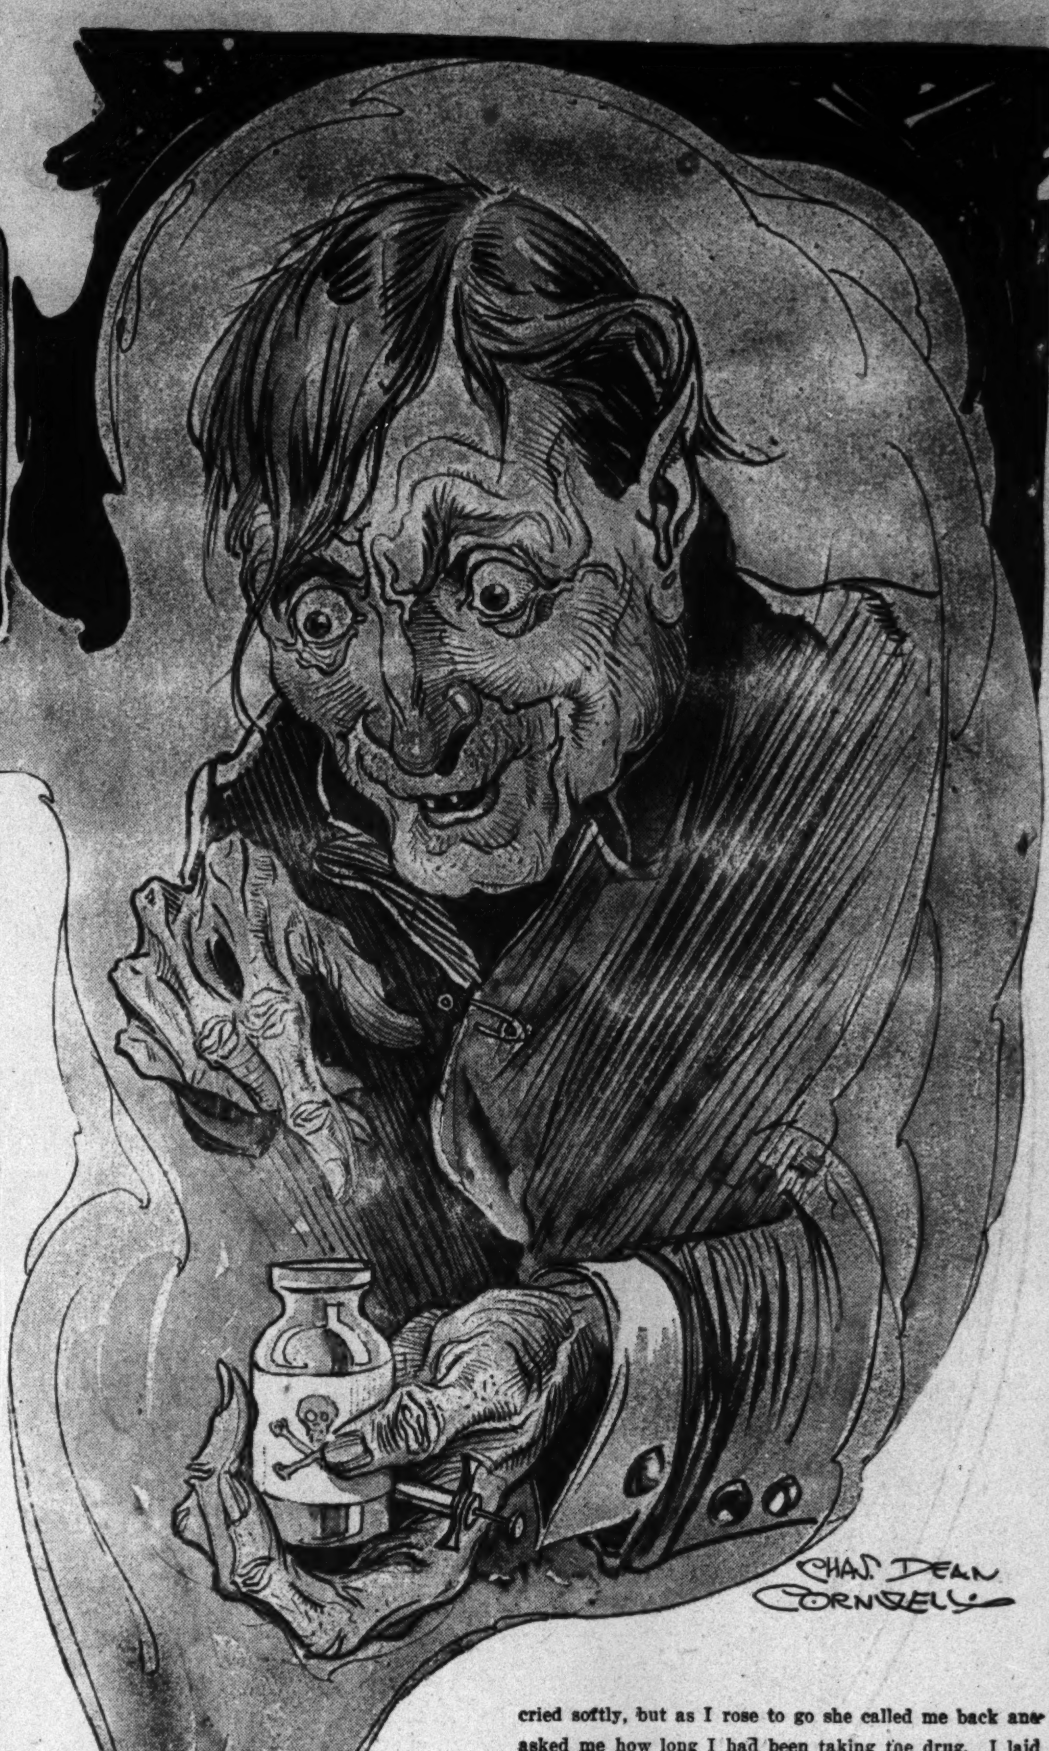
MORPHINE

The Story of a Man Reclaimed from It's Thralldom

By CHARLES J. McGUIRK.



MORPHINE'S history is the history of a demon put on earth by the gods to torture the souls of men. It is a fascinating subject of study aside from or because of the fact that it is one of the most insidious drugs known to the world. I knew a doctor once who thought and spoke of little else than the drug's effects on its victims. He was a morphine "fan" because of his absorption in the drug from a scientific standpoint. He wrote a monograph one time that dealt with the drug, its origin, how it first came to be used by man, and a wealth of other details that interested about fifty other people who were like him in mental habits. He sent it to a society for physiological research and portions of it were later printed in a medical journal. It was dry and uninteresting from a layman's point of view, but it gave him much honor in his profession and about $10 in real money, and these two results of his labors brought him intense happiness.

And then again I knew another man who thought, dreamed, and spoke of nothing else but morphine. He was a "fiend," a victim who had lost all pride. The drug was meat, drink, and air to him. He would do anything to get it. He was not a nice person to meet, but he was an education in himself. When under the influence of the drug he would revert to some affairs that had occupied him earlier in life, and he would babble sentences that gave one a tantalizing glimpse at what he had seen and what he might have been had not the habit claimed him body and soul.

I mention these two men to show the different angles at which morphine seizes the interest. The man about whom this story is written says he has lost all interest in the drug itself. But that is not true. He stops himself from thinking of it and its effects. Else he would revert to the standing of the victim he once was and lose the efforts of ten years which have elapsed since he won his freedom.

Story Not a Rare One.

He told me his story one night in his home, partly to show his knowledge of the drug and partly to refute my argument that a man cannot be reclaimed who has been a victim of the morphine habit for any length of time. He says his story is not a rare one; that many men and women in Chicago have waged a successful fight after years of slavery that held no ray of hope. I didn't know that before. It is a hard thing to believe, but if he is an example of the army of those who came back, they are wonderful people. He certainly has won a victory. You will see that as you read his story. This is the story as he told it to me, sitting where the light shone on his face and rendered more distinct the expressions of despair, pain, hope, and happiness as they flitted across his features in the telling. You must imagine him telling his story to you. Thus:

"Ten years ago I was a victim of the morphine habit. I had been a victim for three years. I had little hope of ever freeing myself from the toils that the drug had woven around me. It was even worse than that with me. I did not care to stop the habit. I looked with terror that I have never since experienced on the agonies that would accompany any effort I might make to get back to normal again, to regain my self-respect and mastery over myself. Morphine does not release its victims easily. A 'fiend' frees himself or herself only through much misery and bodily suffering, and the glamour of the drug makes a fight against it seem unnecessary. You can readily understand this when you realize that morphine takes away the self-respect of its victims, weakens their wills, their nervous systems, and their bodies in such a way as to make itself necessary to their happiness, even to their existence.

"I came up to Chicago twenty years ago from a small town downstate. I was full of ambition and of hope, and with these things I had a superabundance of self-confidence. I thought that I would have some hard periods in my life, periods in which the fight would go against me for a while. I had read of these things in the lives of those who had won success, but the prospect of meeting them did not worry me especially. I thought that things would take the right turn eventually. They couldn't do anything else when I had thrown all my reserves into the battle. Like youth itself, I brooked no possibility of defeat. In this was the weakness of my equipment for the fight. But I didn't know that then. I learned it when I went down into the valley of the shadow of despair.

In Search of Romance.

"Chicago in those days was a 'wide open' town. Stockmen coming in from the ranches of the west and southwest turned a percentage of their profits to the gratifying of their pleasures. There was gambling and wine and women and the glamour that these things shed over the eyes of youth and the imagination of young men.

"I became a bookkeeper in a commission house through a letter of introduction from my father, who had been a boyhood friend of one of the members of the firm. I didn't like my job. There is little romance in endless columns of figures. I spent my nights in search of the romance, and as there is no true romance in the hectic night life until one has become a denizen, I took the substitute and suffered accordingly.

"I took my first taste of morphine more out of curiosity than anything else. I had been drinking that night. I was in a party that had gone out for that purpose. Toward midnight I was miserable from the effects of the drink. I did not want any more. I was sick. One of the party was a morphine 'fiend.' He showed me his 'needle' and enlarged on the effects of the stuff. He told me that if I injected it into my arm I would rid myself of the after effects of my drinking. I was half drunk then. When my tempter had rolled his sleeves to his elbow and injected the stuff I could see the effects registered on his features.

"I rolled my sleeve up then and bared my arm to the needle. He pushed the point just under my skin and shot the drug into my body. I waited expectantly. Then I began to get my reward. A feeling of delightful warmth pervaded me. All over my body there was a tingling. My mind opened to pleasant visions and to new ideas. I was among the gods. I was foolishly happy. The effects of the drink seemed to disappear as though wiped out of the scheme of things. I became drowsy and lay across the table. The last thing I saw before I dropped into a sleep was the leering face of the man who had introduced the drug to me. He grinned as one who has gained an end by unfair means. For years after I saw that face through the haze of the drug. I think I personified him as the demon in the drug.

Needed Another "Jolt."

The next day I woke to a fit of depression. I felt as though the weight of the world was upon me and bearing me down, down. I wanted something to lift this weight. I didn't know what it was. I took a drink of whisky, but it had little or no effect on me unless it was to make me feel more miserable. All that day I tried to do my work with the weight of this unknown thing upon me. My nerves were throbbing as though they had been lacerated and laid bare outside the skin. I could not concentrate my mind on my work. I would make a mistake, try to rectify it, and make the same mistake over again. That night I met the man who had given me the morphine. He asked me with a grin how I felt. I told him my difficulties.

"'What you need is another jolt,' he said. 'That's the only thing that will straighten you out.'

"I refused his offer indignantly. I would never take morphine again. He laughed and said nothing more about it. A week later I had just recovered fully from the effects. I went out to play poker. It was on a Saturday night and there was nothing to do the next day but sleep. I chose that way of passing the time. I met my friend of the needle that night, and toward 5 o'clock that Sunday morning I took a 'little jolt' to waken myself up. Two hours later I took a full 'jolt,' the whole of a quarter grain dissolved in water. I had the same feeling that I had when I took my first injection. That was the beginning of my slavery.

"The man who had given me the drug for the first time put me in touch with a druggist who sold the stuff to those who were 'right.' The druggist included in the sale price of the drug his commission for taking the risk. He charged three times as much as the drug would bring if sold on a physician's prescription. I don't blame him. There is a big penalty attached to the selling of the drug. Besides, he had to pay the police a certain amount of 'protection,' without which he would never have been able to carry on his trade with the underworld of victims.

Drug Easy to Get.

"The methods by which the drug was circulated among its victims were many and varied. You could get it at certain drug stores where the proprietor knew you were 'right,' or you could go to certain back rooms of certain saloons in the city which were known among the 'smock artists' as distributing centers, or you could engage the services of a 'runner' who was 'in the know' and who would procure the drug for you at a nominal charge. The boys who sold flowers in the red light district were usually 'right.' They could procure the drug within fifteen minutes if they thought that the prospective customer was not a 'dick,' a policeman. Their opportunities were great and their trade throve accordingly. They furnished many of the women of the district with the 'dope.' Flowers were just a side line. I used these boys often in the last period of slavery. My financial condition forbade me patronizing a place regularly, and by the time I had raised the price after a period of want the druggists were afraid of me.

My indulgence in the drug made me incapable of working steadily at any one thing. When I had taken it for a year I had lost my will power and a lot of weight. My work became so poor that I was discharged for incompetency. From this point I drifted, doing odd jobs, getting money from home at intervals, and striving to keep up a 'front' on the chance that my credit might be good at some drug store or back room. The drug and my indulgence began to leave the marks on me. Two years after my first injection I looked as though I had tuberculosis. I was a wreck, mentally and physically. I was unstable, dishonest when the need and the occasion arose. I would steal, lie, do anything short of murder to get some of the drug when I had been without it for any length of time.

"It was at this time that I reached the lowest depths of degradation and began to rise again slowly back to self-respect and normal life.

"My father wrote me that a girl from home was coming into the city on her way to a Michigan hospital, where she would take a position as a trained nurse. He asked me to visit her while she was here and to make her stay pleasant.

"I wired my father for money on the receipt of his letter and visited the girl in due time. In the old days she had been the girl of my dreams. Before I had left home we had plighted our troth. But the life I had been living here in the city was not conducive to correspondence with a nice girl. I had stopped writing, and so had she after three of her letters had remained unanswered.

Under Medical Treatment.

"When she saw me I saw the color leave her cheeks.

"'Jack!' she gasped. 'Are you ill?'

"I flushed and stammered that I was perfectly well. She had dropped her handkerchief and I bent to pick it up. As I reached toward the floor there was a tinkle and the hypodermic needle lay shining on the floor. I saw by her expression that she knew as I bent swiftly for the thing. She hid her face in her hands and cried softly, but as I rose to go she called me back and asked me how long I had been taking the drug. I laid the whole case before her. There was that in her eyes that compelled me to. She thought the whole thing over carefully, and as I knelt and hid my face in her hands she stroked my head and comforted me. I promised her that I would stop taking it, but she only shook her head. 'You need medical treatment, Jack,' she said. 'The habit is beyond your control now.'

"She put on her hat and together we went to a doctor. He prescribed medicine for me and took up the case with interest. Fortunately I had fallen into the hands of a young physician who was deeply interested in drugs and drug victims. He had discovered a cure, and he wanted to know for sure before he gave it to the medical world. He had already cured several victims in the county jail, where he had been stationed for something over a year. His fame had gone abroad among the victims, both because his was a sure cure and because of his charity to his patients.

"'This medicine will help you,' he said, 'but you must do this thing yourself. You must remember what you have lost and what you can win again if you will only throw this habit from you. I will watch you carefully. I will see that your diet is just right all the time. A man needs the right food more than he does anything else when he is stopping a habit like yours.'

"I told him that I was not in any condition to pay him for his services then, but that I would when I got on my feet again.

"'Don't you worry about that,' he said. 'That is none of your business at the present time. It's up to you to get well, for if you don't I can't get my money and you will have done me a wrong.'

No More Fear of the Drug.

"I laughed in a shamed way, and then came the full resolve to stop the habit that drove away the fear of my weakness that obsessed me. It took us more than a year, the three of us. For the girl had been transferred at her own request to a hospital here in the city where she could be near me. The doctor got me a job, a light clerk's position in an office of a friend who had gone the way before me. I spent every minute I could with the girl. I needed encouragement and I needed a woman's company, and I had come to know how much that one particular girl meant to my happiness. We went to the theater on her nights off duty, and we were together as much as we could possibly be.

"I fell four times, I think, but each time the man and the woman, the doctor and the nurse, put their strength behind me and helped me to regain the ground I lost.

"Two years later I was free of the drug and the fear of it. I knew it couldn't touch me again. We were married, and we struggled along together, as young couples do, hoping and dreaming success. It came to us in time. I was promoted in the office where I worked, and I saved my money. My father died and left me a little money, and I invested it in the business. The business prospered. It is prospering now. I am in comfortable circumstances. I am not afraid of the drug any more."

When he had finished I asked him if he would take an injection on a doctor's orders.

"I would not," he said. "I wouldn't take a 'jolt' for a million dollars. If I did I would have the fight to fight all over again—and this time I'd lose."

THE BIGGEST FAMILY ROW SI

THE saber wielding hand of hatred has cleaved the ties of relationship that bound the members of the great family of rulers of Europe and the greatest family quarrel in history is under way. TRAINING the TOUCHDOWN STARS-

by
ONEY FRED SWEET

THE day I became an assistant trainer with the University of Chicago football squad I was so green that I ran back to the quarters all out of breath when "Pat" Page sent me after the "muscle weight." At first "Jonnie"—just "Jonnie"—the head trainer for the Maroon team these last ten years, was going to wrap up the four pound window weight and let me lug it back to the gridiron to help "lengthen the stride" of six-foot-four "Shorty" Des Jardien, but on second thought the popular czar over the oil of wintergreen bottles changed his mind.

"Nope," he said, "you'll have troubles enough around here without being the goat on a gag that was pulled on freshmen as far back as the days of 'Wallie' Steffen. Go over there and do a little rubbing on 'Spike' Shull's shoulder. You seem to be willing enough, but you're lacking in spirit. Do you realize we're going to have a game tomorrow? Get some spirit into your system, man—some spirit."

It was for this same lack of spirit that the other assistant trainers criticised me.

"You could tell plain enough that you've never been around a college campus before," poohed red sweatered "Rudy" Montgomery, who with ease recalled the game with Michigan in 1905 when Chicago won by a score of two to nothing with Mark Catlin as the hero.

Even Jimmie Twohig, the famous groundkeeper, for whom the students raised a sum that he might be sent to the Olympian games, bawled me out in his rich Irish brogue.

"Do you mean to say that you didn't know that the fellow who just asked for his headgear was Dolly Gray, who will make the all wistern half?" gasped the short, red mustached, gold toothed individual who on the instant can call any old "C" man by his first name. "Why, mahn, don't you realize where you be, and that you air mixed up with heroes?'

Then he ignored me to call sympathetically to the players who had trotted out onto the field: "Keep goin', bys. Keep goin'."

Meets the "Old Man."

It was all just as strange and new to me out in the stadium field as it had been beneath the concrete amphitheater in the training quarters with their electric bulb treatments, their five foot square tile bath tub, their newly invented apparatus that had the appearance of two mill wheels coming together, between which Redmon, right guard, had been able to grind down his weight from 310 to 260 pounds.

Just outside the stadium gate could be heard the whistles on the "redhot" carts, conducted by swarthy men from far away southern countries famed in history for their bygone achievements in culture. Among the ivy that clung along the walls of the gray concrete buildings sparrows twittered and the windows flashed with gold in reflection of the early sinking sun. My reverie was interrupted by the spluttering of a cyclecar as it came through the gate and was swerved about by the man on the wheel until it took up a position at the side of the field. It was when I inquired who the passenger in the seat might be—the thick set man wearing a maroon banded white felt hat—that I was answered by three thunderstruck but none the less enthusiastic varsity aspirants, known as "Lukes."

Reverently I was told that I was in the presence of Stagg—"the Old Man"—the man who had never been heard to cuss, never had taken a drink, never had smoked, and never was wrong about anything. He was troubled with sciatic rheumatism now, this veteran athlete who had been coach since the school began, and I don't know whether it was pain from that or not which caused the expression I saw come into his face when I went over to inform him that I had suddenly decided to be a football team trainer. You couldn't really say that I had an audience with him, for all the time that I was at his side his eyes were fixed intently upon the thirty or more heavily padded touchdown schemers who at a distance were going through signal practice. Suddenly he lifted his big maroon megaphone to his lips and shouted to one of them:

"You did that beautifully—beautifully the wrong way," he bawled out in even voice.

The players became motionless and the man who had made the mistake stood with his head shaking in shame.

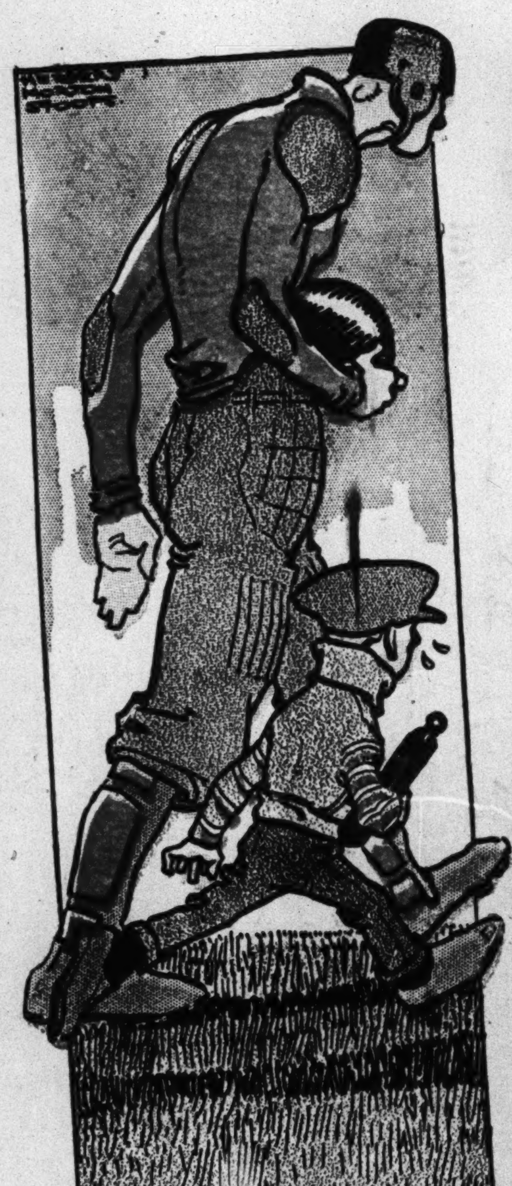
"Have you got it now?" "the Old Man" called without taking the megaphone from his lips. "Well, let me see you do it. What had you ought to do? You don't know?"

The megaphoned voice had reached the climax of sarcasm. "I understand you are a good student," he finished. "You may be, but you are a bonehead at football."

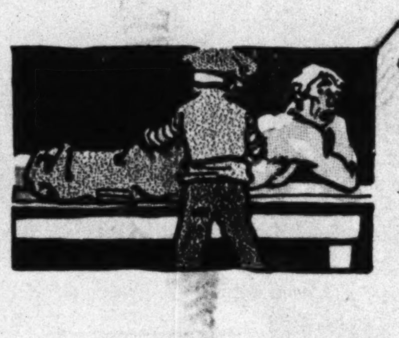
For four hours the practice continued, and it was an hour after the melancholy 6 o'clock chimes before it came time for the pulling off of plasters and the shower baths. When it became dark the "ghost" ball was used beneath electric lights. I had the uncomfortable experience on a couple of occasions of being mistaken for a spy from a rival camp, and I have no doubt that if "Jonnie" had not come to my rescue my fate would have been less tragic than that which is meted out to such gentlemen these days across the water. Hanging around during that practice I could appreciate what "Schnitz" Pierce told me on the side lines the next day when I asked him how he would like to be in the game again.

"I'd like to be in the game all right," said "Schnitz," but I wouldn't care for the training. No one knows how fierce it is until he's been through it."

I am convinced from my own brief experience as a trainer that varsity players are as temperamental as prima donnas. Even their shoes have to be laced a certain set way. Berger, the left half back, they told me, wouldn't ride in a street car for days before a game for fear that the jarring motion might spoil his condition. And most of the players had hunches—hunches that they would win with a drop kick at this stage of the game or a place kick at that.



The "MUSCLE WEIGHT" for SHORTY" DES JARDIEN



I shall never forget "Jonnie's" fatherly words of advice as he soothed bruises.

"Now, you boys musn't forget to keep up with your studies," he cautioned. "You've got to have so many majors, you know. Now you listen close to what the professors say."

And when it came time for the team to leave in their street clothes, after Agar had whirled away in his big car with four other "Dekes" to their fraternity house, "Jonnie" turned his attention again to me.

"You haven't got the spirit," he sighed. "You haven't got the spirit."

Dining with the Phi Deltas.

"I wasn't left out of the fraternity house stuff myself. Full Back Acker belongs to the Phi Delta Thetas. I sat next to him at dinner. I heard the Phi Delta Theta song as soon as we had finished the pie and before we left the table to get around the piano. I had an opportunity to study the various fraternity pennants on the walls and I gazed upon the framed pictures of bygone Maroon stars who had belonged to the Phi Delts. It wasn't so very many years ago that newspaper photographers took pictures of athletes standing still instead of in action.

I might have gotten along very nicely at the dinner at the fraternity house if it hadn't been for a freshman by the name of Gerdes—a freshman who was wearing a long green streamer at the back of his green cap under penalty of being ducked in the campus fountain. Learning that I was a new trainer, Gerdes breathlessly asked me about the condition of one of the important players. I happened to have overheard that this particular player would not be in shape for the game the next day, and I imparted the information rather indifferently. I thought that Gerdes would faint. You would have thought that I had told an Englishman that the Germans had just destroyed their entire fleet.

"But it doesn't make any difference. There are plenty of other players," I consoled him—"plenty of other fellows who are crazy to play."

I know from the expression on Gerdes' face that he decided then and there that I was a hellava trainer. It was apparent that he figured, as had trainer "Jonnie," that I was decidedly lacking in college spirit.

There were some great doings at the massmeeting that night. From my place up behind the scenes I saw the co-eds join in "the seven rahs," "the three rahs," "the hello," the "long yell," and the "Chi-ca-go, Chi-ca-go, Chi-ca-go, Go, Go-Chica, Go-Chica, Go-Chicago!" led by a husky voiced youth who leaped and slid and turkey trotted from one side of the stage to the other.

I saw the embarrassed members of the team tortured at speechmaking, "Pat" Page concluding the remarks with: "Don't use your hands and feet on 'em, boys, but hit 'em hard."

The youthful yell leader, rushing breathless off the stage, could hardly believe his eyes when he saw me standing there in absolute unconcern and without a hint of hoarseness in my voice.

Joins in Seven Rahs for "Pete."

I was so busy in trying to catch all the orders from "Jonnie"—"Jonnie," who was now wearing collar and tie and a brand new Mackinaw coat—that I was not aware of the vast change that had come over the stadium until we all went hurrying to the bench along the side lines. On both sides of the field thousands upon thousands of faces rose in mountains toward the gray November sky, and on each side of the valley rival bands were playing as if at a carnival. Along the fortlike walls there fluttered the gay pennants of the conference teams, while from the topmost tower fluttered a huge pennant of maroon. A battery of photographers was maneuvering along the side lines, between yells and band playing could be heard the "click, click" of the telegraph instruments in the press stand, and the yells that I had heard the night before at the massmeeting sounded vastly different out there in the open.

It was a long time before either team was able to make any great progress against the other, but suddenly pandemonium seemed to break loose from the other side of the field. With a series of forward passes the visiting team had rushed perilously near our goal post. Keeping up with the action along with "Jonnie" and "Rudy" at the side lines, I saw their swift half back tackled just in time. There were a few more plays and then time was called for between halves.

Both bands broke out afresh as the teams trotted back to their quarters and Coach Stagg's cyclecar began to sputter again. As I helped work with sponge and alcohol among the well-nigh exhausted maroon blanketed, duck coated, orange headgeared players in the "tower room" I expected "the Old Man" to hand out a few words of praise for the frantic manner in which the boys had battled, but there were no words of praise forthcoming. He merely chewed gum a bit faster than usual and seemed sore about the mistakes that had been made.

We were back on the field and they were going to it again. Again there was the struggle back and forth on the field without any apparent possibility of scoring by either side.

"40, 57, 56—Shift—103." The pigskin was tossed back to "Pete" Russell and he paused for an instant as if he were about to slip it to one of the other men. Then he pressed the ball close up to him and started down the field. He was tackled, bumped against blocked and battered but in spite of it all he emerged far down the field. He had reached the other goal. He—he had made a touchdown! The Maroons had scored! I found myself leaning forward as if it was myself who was carrying the ball. I felt the blood fairly pounding through my veins! And then before I knew it I was joining with all the strength of my lungs in "seven rahs" for Russell.

"Jonnie" caught my limp form as my last frenzied "rah" had joined in the echo. With his trainer's towel he wiped the tears from my eyes and tried to straighten the quiver on my lips.

"Yep," I capitulated. "I came out here perfectly sane yesterday, but now—now they've got me doing it, too."

$10,000 for an idea, which you must tell in 100 words or less.

There will be no second prize.

Only one first prize of $10,000 for the man, woman or child who gives the best idea to finish "The Million Dollar Mystery"!

$10,000 for an idea.

READ THE CONDITIONS.

THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE prints today the last installment of "The Million Dollar Mystery," a mystery story for the solution of which a prize of $10,000 will be given by the Thanhouser Film corporation. The story has run twenty-two consecutive weeks in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE. As each chapter appeared in THE TRIBUNE a two-reel film corresponding with it was released in the various moving picture theaters. By this arrangement with the Thanhouser Film corporation it has been possible for TRIBUNE readers both to read the story and see the moving picture of it as it progressed from week to week. The first film was released on June 22, the last on Monday, Nov. 16. The las chapter of the story appears in this issue of THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

CONDITIONS GOVERNING THE CONTEST.

The prize of $10,000 will be won by the man, woman, or child who writes the most acceptable solution of the mystery, from which the last two reels of motion picture drama will be made and the last two chapters of the story written by Harold MacGrath.

Solutions may be sent to the Thanhouser Film corporation, either at Chicago or New York, any time up to midnight, Jan. 14. They must be received not later than that date. This allows eight weeks after the first appearance of the last film releases and seven weeks after the last chapter is published in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE in which to submit solutions. The Chicago address of the Thanhouser company is 166 West Washington street and the New York City address is 71 West Twenty-third street.

A board of three judges will determine which of the many solutions received is the most acceptable.

The judges are to be Harold MacGrath, Lloyd Lonergan, author of the scenario, and Miss Mae Tinee of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

The judgment of this board will be absolute and final. Nothing of a literary nature will be considered in the decision nor given any preference in the selection of the winner of the $10,000 prize. The last two reels, which will give the most acceptable solution to the mystery, will be presented in the theaters having this feature as soon as it is possible to produce same. The story corresponding to these motion pictures will appear in this newspaper coincidentally, or as soon after the appearance of the pictures as practicable. With the last two reels will be shown the pictures of the winner, his or her home, and other interesting features.

Solutions to the mystery must not be more than 100 words long. Here are some questions to be kept in mind in connection with the mystery as an aid to a solution:

No. 1—What becomes of the millionaire?
No. 2—What becomes of the $1,000,000?
No. 3—Whom does Florence marry?
No. 4—What becomes of the Russian countess?

Nobody connected either directly or indirectly with "The Million Dollar Mystery" will be considered as a contestant.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Stanley Hargreave, millionaire, having joined what he believed to be a great social movement, finds that in reality he has been trapped by the Black Hundred. After a miraculous escape from the den of the brilliant thieves he lives the life of a recluse for eighteen years. One night, surrendering to a restless spirit of rebellion, Hargreave enters a Broadway restaurant and there comes face to face with the Black Hundred's leader, Braine.

After the meeting, during which neither man openly recognizes the other, Hargreave hurries to his magnificent Riverdale home and lays plans for making his escape from the country. He writes a letter to the girls' school in New Jersey where sixteen years before he had mysteriously left on the doorstep of the institution his tiny baby daughter—named "Florence Gray" by the note attached to the basket—and arranges that she be sent to him at once. He also pays a visit to the hangar of a daredevil aviator.

Braine and members of his band surround Hargreave's home at night, but as they enter the house the watchers outside see a balloon leave the roof. The safe is found empty—the million which Hargreave was known to have drawn that day was gone. Then one of the men outside announced that he had punctured the balloon and sent it to the bottom of the ocean.

The next day Florence arrives from the girls' school and is greeted by the butler, Jones, whom Hargreave has taken into full confidence. She is later visited by Countess Olga, Braine's companion, who claims to be a relative. Two bogus detectives call, but they find themselves thwarted by Norton, a newspaper man, who happens to be on the scene at the right moment.

Later Florence is lured from home by the band, but succeeds in freeing herself from their clutches. The next day Jones removes a box from its hiding place and, pursued by Braine's men, rushes to the water front. A race in motor boats ensues and Jones drops the box into the sea.

Concealed above the rendezvous of the Black Hundred, a man learns of the recovery by a sailor of the box Jones dropped into the sea and of its subsequent return to the sea, and he quickly communicates the fact to Jones. A duplicate box is planted and later secured by the band, but before its contents are examined the box mysteriously disappears.

Through treachery in the Hargreave household Florence is delivered into the hands of an unscrupulous doctor, who is in the pay of the Black Hundred. From the faithful Susan, Norton learns that the doctor has declared that Florence is stricken with smallpox and that he is preparing to spirit her away. By acting quickly the reporter, with the aid of Susan, succeeds in extricating the young woman from the danger after an encounter with members of the gang.

By chance Florence discovers a cave used by the Black Hundred. Being surprised by members of the band, she conceals herself and while in hiding learns of a mysterious paper which is of vital importance to her father's safety. At great risk to herself she secures the document. Braine loses hope of securing the $1,000,000 and turns to revenge.

Henri Servan is given documentary evidence against the Black Hundred. Members of the organization try to get the evidence, but Jones is too clever for them.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE federal government agreed to say nothing, to put no obstacles in the way of the Russian agent, provided he could abduct his trio without seriously clashing with the New York police authorities. It was a recognized fact that the local police force wanted the newspaper glory which would attend the crushing of the Black Hundred. It would be an exploit. But their glory was nil; nor did Servan take his trio back with him to Russia.

Many strange things happened that night, the night of the final adventure.

Florence sat in her room reading. The book was "Oliver Twist," not the pleasantest sort of book to read under the existing circumstances. Several times—she had reached the place where Fagin overheard Nancy's confession—she fancied she heard doors closing softly, but credited it to her imagination. Poor Nancy, who wanted to be good but did not find time to be! Florence possessed a habit familiar to most of us—the need of apples or candy when we are reading. So she rang the bell for her maid, intending to ask her to bring up some apples. She turned to her reading, presently to break off and strike the bell again. Where was that maid? She waited perhaps five minutes, then laid down the book and began to investigate.

There was not a servant to be found in the entire house! What in the world could that mean? Used as she was to heartrending suspenses, she was none the less terrified. Something had taken the servants from the house. From whence was the danger to come this time? Where was Jones? Why did he not return as he had promised? It was long past the hour when he said he would be back.

She went into the library and picked up the telephone. She was told that Mr. Norton was out on an assignment, but that he would be notified the moment he returned. She opened a drawer in the desk. She touched the automatic, but did not take it up. She left the drawer open, however.

Earlier, at the newspaper office that night, Jim went into the managing editor's office and laid a bulky manuscript on that gentleman's desk.

"Is this it?"

IN THE HAND TO HAND FIGHT, THE CLEAN LIFE OF THE REPORTER TOLD.

"It is," said Jim.

"You have captured them?"

"No; but there is a net about them from which not one shall escape. There's the story of my adventures, of the adventures of Miss Hargreave and the butler, Jones. You'll find it exciting reading. You might just as well send it up to the composing room. At midnight I'll telephone the introduction. It's a scoop. Don't worry about that."

The editor riffled the pages.

"A hundred and twelve pages, 300 words to the page; man, it's a novel!"

"It'll read like one."

"Sit down for a moment and let me skim through the first story."

At the end of ten minutes the editor laid down the copy. He opened a drawer and took out two envelopes. The blue one he tore up and dropped into the waste basket. Norton understood and smiled. They had meant to discharge him if he fell down. The other envelope was a fat one.

"Open it," said the editor, smiling a little himself.

The envelope contained a check for $2,500, two round trip first class tickets to Liverpool, together with innumerable continental tickets such as are issued to tourists.

"Why two?" asked Jim, innocently.

"Forget it, my boy, forget it. You ought to know that in this office we don't employ blind men. The whole staff is on. There you are, a fat check and three months' vacation. Go and get married; and if you return before the three months are up, I'll fire you myself on general principles."

Jim laughed happily and the two men shook hands. Then Jim went forth to complete the big assignment. Five minutes later Florence called him up to learn that he had gone.

What should she do? Jones had told her to stay in the house and not to leave it. But where was he? Why did he not come? What was the meaning of this desertion by the servants? She wandered about aimlessly, looking out of windows, imagining forms in the shadows. Her imagination had not deceived her; she had heard doors close softly.

"Susan, Susan!' she murmured; but Susan was in the hospital.

Oliver Twist! What had possessed her to start reading that old tale again? She should have read something of a light and joyous character. After half an hour's wandering about the lonely house she returned to the library, feeling that she would be safer where both telephone and revolver were.

And while she sat waiting for she knew not what, her swiftly beating heart sending the blood into her throat so that it almost suffocated her, a man turned into the street and walked resolutely toward the Hargreave place. He passed a man leaning against a lamp post, but he never turned to look at him.

This man, however, threw away his cigar and hot-footed it to the nearest pay station. He knew in his soul that he had just seen the man for whom they had been hunting all these weary but strenuous weeks—Stanley Hargreave in the flesh! Half an hour after his telephone message the chief of the Black Hundred and many lesser lights were on their way to the house of mystery. Had they but known!

Now, the man who had created this tremendous agitation went serenely on. He proceeded directly and fearlessly to the front door, produced a latch key and entered. He passed through the hall and reception room to the library and paused on the threshold dramatically. Florence stepped back with a sharp cry of alarm. She had heard the hall door open and close and had taken it for granted that Jones had returned.

There was a tableau of short duration.

"Don't you know me?" asked the stranger in a singularly pleasant voice.

Florence had been imposed upon too many times. She shook her head defiantly, though her knees shook so that she was certain that the least touch would send her over.

"I am your father, child!"

Florence slipped unsteadily behind the desk and seized the revolver which lay in the drawer. The man by the curtains smiled sadly. It was a smile that caused Florence to waver a bit. Still, she extended her arm.

"You do not believe me?" said the man, advancing slowly.

"No. I have been deceived too many times, sir. Stay where you are. You will wait here till my butler returns. O, if I were only sure!" she burst out suddenly and passionately. "What proof have you that you are what you say?"

He came toward her, holding out his hands. "This, that you cannot shoot me. Ah, the damnable wretches! What have they done to you, my child, to make you suspicious of every one? How I have watched over you in secret! I will tell you what only Jones and the reporter know, that the aviator died, that I alone was rescued, that I gave Norton the five thousand, that I watched the windows of the Russian woman, and overheard nearly every plot that was hatched in the council chamber of the Black Hundred; that I was shot in the arm while crossing the lawn one night. And now we have the scoundrels just where we want them. They will be in this house for me within half an hour, and not one of them will leave it in freedom. I am your father, Florence; I am the lonely father who has spent the best years of his life away from you in order to secure your safety. Can't you feel the truth of all this?"

"No, no! Please do not approach any nearer; stay where you are!"

At that moment the telephone rang. With the revolver still leveled she picked up the receiver.

"Hello, hello! Who is it? . . . O, Jim, Jim, come at once! I am holding at bay a man who says he is my father. Hold him where he is, you say? All right, I will. Come quick!"

"Jim!" murmured the man, still advancing. He must have that revolver. The poor child might spoil the whole affair. "So what Jones tells me is true: that you are going to marry this reporter chap?"

She did not answer.

"With or without my consent?"

If only he would drop that fearless smile! she thought. "With or without anybody's consent," she said.

"What in the world can I say to you to convince you?" he cried. "The trap is set; but if Braine and his men come and find us both like this, good heaven, child, we are both lost! Come! Come!"

"Stay where you are."

At that moment she heard a sound at the door. Her gaze roved; and it was enough for the man. He reached out and caught her arm. She tried to tear herself loose.

"My child, in God's name, listen to reason! They are entering the hall and they will have us both."

Suddenly Florence knew. She could not have told you why; but there was an appeal in the man's voice that went to her heart.

"You are my father!"

"Yes, yes! But you've found it out just a trifle too late, my dear. Quick; this side of the desk!"

Braine and his men dashed into the library. Olga entered leisurely.

"Both of them!" yelled Braine, exultantly. "Both of them together; what luck!"

There was a sharp, fierce struggle; and when it came to an end Hargreave was trussed to a chair.

"Ah, so we meet again, Hargreave!" said Braine.

Hargreave shrugged. What he wanted was time.

"A million! We have you. Where is it, or I'll twist your heart before your eyes."

"Father, forgive me!"

"I understand, my child."

"Where is it?" Braine seized Florence by the wrist and swung her toward him.

"Don't tell him, father; don't mind me," said the girl, bravely.

Braine, smiling his old evil smile, drew the girl close. It was the last time he ever touched her.

"Look!" screamed Olga.

Every one turned, to see Jones' face peering between the curtains. There was an ironic smile on the butler's lips. The face vanished.

"After him!" cried Braine, releasing Florence.

"After him!" mimicked a voice from the hall.

The curtains were thrown back suddenly. Jones appeared, and Jim, and the Russian agent, and a dozen policemen. Tableau!

Braine was the only man who kept his head. He floored Norton, smashed a window, and leaped out. The blow dazed Norton, but he was on his feet almost instantly and followed Braine through the window. Across the lawn the two sped, with an exchange of shots which emptied both automatics but did no damage. Braine headed for his auto. He jumped in, only to be hauled out again by the furious reporter. A hand to hand fight followed, and the clean life of the reporter told.

"There, my angelic friend, I believe that the game is up. There is one shot left in this automatic. If you make any attempt to escape, I'll let you have it, not to kill but to disable. You and your precious countess will sail tomorrow morning for the Baltic, and from there you will go to the lead mines." He dragged his prisoner toward the house.

"Your troubles are over, my child," said Hargreave, as he pressed Florence to his heart.

"And mine have begun," murmured the countess. "But I have still one shot."

The police stood encircling her. Calmly she opened her handbag and took out her handkerchief. It was a thick and heavy silk one. Swiftly she unscrewed the top of her walking stick (it will be seen now that the carrying of it was not an affectation!), extracted a vial, and threw it violently to the floor. An overpowering sweet odor filled the room. Jones, knowing how deeply versed Braine was in oriental poisons and narcotics, made a desperate but futile effort to tear down a curtain to throw over the liquid, but even in the effort he felt his senses going. The last he was conscious of was a mocking laugh.

But the entrance of Jim, dragging Braine after him, shocked all the banter out of the countess. She turned and rushed madly for the stairs, without having the least idea how she was to manage an escape from the upper stories. She had thought Braine free. As she flew up the steps all the past returned, all her warnings to that stubborn man. This was the end . . . Russia! The horrors of the cold and the deadly damps of the mines . . . forever!

Jim, still holding the battered conspirator, watched her flight in amazement. He could not understand—till he pushed Braine into the library and the vanishing odor assailed his nostrils. What these fumes were he was never to know, but they proved to be transitory. Five minutes sufficed to bring all back to their senses. For the while they forgot Olga.

"This man is mine," said Servan, nodding toward Braine.

"He's yours without charge," said Jim.

"I am an American citizen," said Braine, who, realizing what the future held, readily preferred a long prison term in America to the horrors of Russian exile.

"Your certificate has been destroyed," said Servan, "and the state department considers your papers void because you obtained them under false oaths. You are an undesirable citizen, and the republic is happy to learn that you will be taken off its hands."

"And because," added Norton, "you have laid too many mines in the blackmailing business, and the government does not propose to have them made known to the public through a long and useless trial. It was a long run, old top, but right is right. And, by the way, I want you to meet Mr. Jedson, formerly of Scotland Yard."

He indicated Jones, who started.

"Yes," went on the reporter, "I recognized him long ago."

"It is true," said Hargreave, taking Jones' hand in his own. "Fifteen years ago I employed him to watch my affairs, and very well has he done so. And to you, you wretch," turning upon the haggard Braine, "listen: there is a million, and you have been within a foot of it a dozen times. It has been under your very nose. Do you remember Poe's 'Purloined Letter'? Ha! Under your very nose, within touch of your hand! Now, take him away, Mr. Servan. The police will be satisfied with the prisoners they have."

So, presently, Hargreave, Jones, Florence, and Jim were alone. That smile which had revealed to Florence her father's identity stole over his face again. He put his hand on Jim's shoulder and beckoned to Florence.

"Are you really anxious to marry this young man?"

Florence nodded.

"Well, then, do so. And go to Europe with him on your honeymoon; and as a wedding present to you both, for every dollar that he has I will add a hundred; and when you get tired of travel you will both come back here to live. The Black Hundred has ceased to exist."

"And now," said Jones, shaking his shoulders.

"Well?" said Hargreave.

"My business is done. Still——" Jones paused.

"Go on," said Hargreave, soberly.

"Well, the truth is, sir, I've grown used to you. And if you'll let me play the butler till the end I shall be most happy."

"I was going to suggest it."

Norton took Florence by the hand and drew her away.

"Where are you taking me?" she asked.

"I'm going to take this pretty hand of yours and put it flat upon $1,000,000. And if you don't believe it, follow me."

She followed.

[This is the last chapter of "The Million Dollar Mystery" that will appear until after the $10,000 prize has been awarded, when the concluding chapters, written by Mr. MacGrath from the best solution offered, will be published.]

Next Sunday in The Chicago Tribune will appear the first chapter of "Zudora," a photo-play serial in twenty episodes. "Zudora" is the successor to "The Million Dollar Mystery" in leading motion picture theaters of Chicago and the United States. It is the creation of Daniel Carson Goodman, and has been novelized for The Tribune by Harold Mac Grath, author of "The Million Dollar Mystery," "Adventures of Kathlyn," etc.

Mr. Mac Grath has woven a remarkable narrative around a beautiful and clever girl—Zudora by name—on whom has been imposed, through the designs of her guardian, the extraordinary task of solving twenty perplexing mysteries, in order to secure a fortune which has been left her by her father who died when she was a baby. Zudora calls to her aid all the latest inventions of science to help her furnish a solution for these baffling mysteries, and running throughout the series is an extraordinary love story which furnishes the basis for the master plot. Though each chapter and episode is complete in itself, all are linked together with a final climax that holds the reader in suspense from the beginning to the very end.

The motion pictures have been specially posed under the direction of Mr. Goodman, who is recognized as the creator of the modern school of realism in photo drama. Marguerite Snow, who played the part of "Countess Olga" in "The Million Dollar Mystery," has the leading role in "Zudora." James Cruze, the hero reporter in "The Million Dollar Mystery," appears in the difficult character role of "Hassam Ali," who frequently assumes the disguise of a Hindu fakir to carry out his designs. The hero in "Zudora" is Harry Benham, who has earned a big name for himself in Thanhouser features.

The JACK O'LANTERN MAN

Told by Georgene Faulkner The Story Lady

> DEAR MISS FAULKNER:
>
> I hear your stories and I like them very well. Will you please tell some story about the Pilgrims and Indians? From
> JAMES LESTER ROXBURGH,
> 3429 Drummond place, Chicago.

LONG, long ago, in the early days in New England, there lived a small group of people in each little village. These people came from far across the sea, because in their home country (England) they had not been free to worship God as they desired; so they became Pilgrims, or wanderers. And because these Pilgrims were so anxious to worship God and were so strict in obeying his laws, and because they were always good and pure in every way, they were called "Puritans" as well as "Pilgrims."

This new country, or New England, as they called it, was all a wilderness when the Pilgrims came here. So they went right to work, they cut down trees and built log houses for their homes, they built a church in which to worship and a schoolhouse for the children, and they also had to build a rude fort, or block house, where they could go to protect themselves from the Indians. For the red men were roving about in the forest, and they were not always friendly to the white men. For a time the Indians were kind to the Pilgrims and showed them how to plant corn, and together they had their harvest time of feasting and rejoicing. But later, when the Indians saw more and more white men coming to their shores, and more and more land was taken from them as they built their villages, the red men became angry and fought with the Pilgrims.

You all know the story Longfellow tells of the brave Capt. Miles Standish, and of the beautiful Puritan maiden, Priscilla. You also know that the Pilgrims were the people who gave us our first Thanksgiving day, for they were so grateful to God for his bountiful gifts that they said, "We will set apart one day in which to go to church and give thanks." And when the church service was ended they went to their homes and feasted and rejoiced in their own way.

For many, many days every one in the family helped in this preparation for the day of Thanksgiving. Even the little children helped by gathering in the nuts and storing them away. They brought in the apples and helped to cut and string them, to hang up to dry. In the springtime they helped with the planting, and in the falltime they helped with the harvesting; so these Puritan children went to school only a short time in the winter and in the summer.

Once upon a time there was a happy Puritan family who had worked hard together all day long out in the fields, for they were preparing for the Thanksgiving day. After supper the father said, "I will not be gone long, wife, but I must go now to see our sick neighbor."

The children were not surprised when they saw their father take his gun from the wall; that was his usual custom, for did he not always carry his gun with him when they marched to church? The Indians might be lurking about, and one should always be prepared.

The mother sat by her spinning wheel, working away by the light from the big fireplace in the kitchen, and the children were grouped about her. "Let us string some more apples," said Endurance; "you know we helped father fill the baskets again this afternoon.'

"O, no," said Obed; "let us make a Jack o' Lantern!

I found this big orange pumpkin today and father said we could have it for our Jack o'Lantern."

"Goody goody! What fun! what fun! Let us make our Jack o' Lantern!" they all shouted as they crowded about Obed and watched him cut the top off the pumpkin. Then they all put their hands down into the pumpkin and scooped out the seeds. Patience brought a big paper, and she and Endurance spread the seeds carefully upon it. "We must save these seeds until next spring," said Patience. "Yes," answered the mother, "we must always prepare for another season."

"Now make two big eyes," said Endurance, as she watched Obed cut two large round holes. Then he cut a triangle for a nose, and last of all he cut a long curved mouth with sharp teeth sticking up like a saw.

"My, what a big mouth!" gasped Patience. "All the better to eat you with, my dear!" said her brother Amos.

"O, mother, see our Jack o' Lantern man! May we have a candle for him?" The mother found a piece of a candle which she had dipped, and she lighted it and placed it in the pumpkin. The light streamed out through the big eyes and nose and mouth, and truly it was such an ugly face that the little sisters were almost afraid of their Jack o' Lantern.

Just then a man came rushing along, shouting: "The Indians! the Indians! They are coming up from the swamp! There is not time for you to run to the block house; put out your fires and hide!"

"You take the little girls, mother," said Obed, "and hide them in the loft. Amos and I will barricade the door and stay here and watch for the Indians. Maybe father will come soon to help us."

The boys covered the fire over and blew out the candle, while the mother took the two children up into the loft. "Look! look!" whispered Amos, as he peered out into the darkness, "I think there's a shadow behind that tree. O, see, it is an Indian!" As they watched the shadow creep from tree to tree, nearer and nearer their house, Obed said, "Let us try to scare him with our Jack o' Lantern! Quick! quick!" They lighted the Jack o' Lantern and set him in the window. They moved him slowly from side to side. His big eyes glared and stared into the darkness, his great mouth grinned and leered at the red man. When the Indian saw the shining eyes and ugly mouth he gave one great yell of fright and, calling to his comrades, "The Fire Spirit, with eyes aflame! The Fire Spirit!" he fled through the woods shrieking in terror, and all the other Indians ran with him back to the swamp.

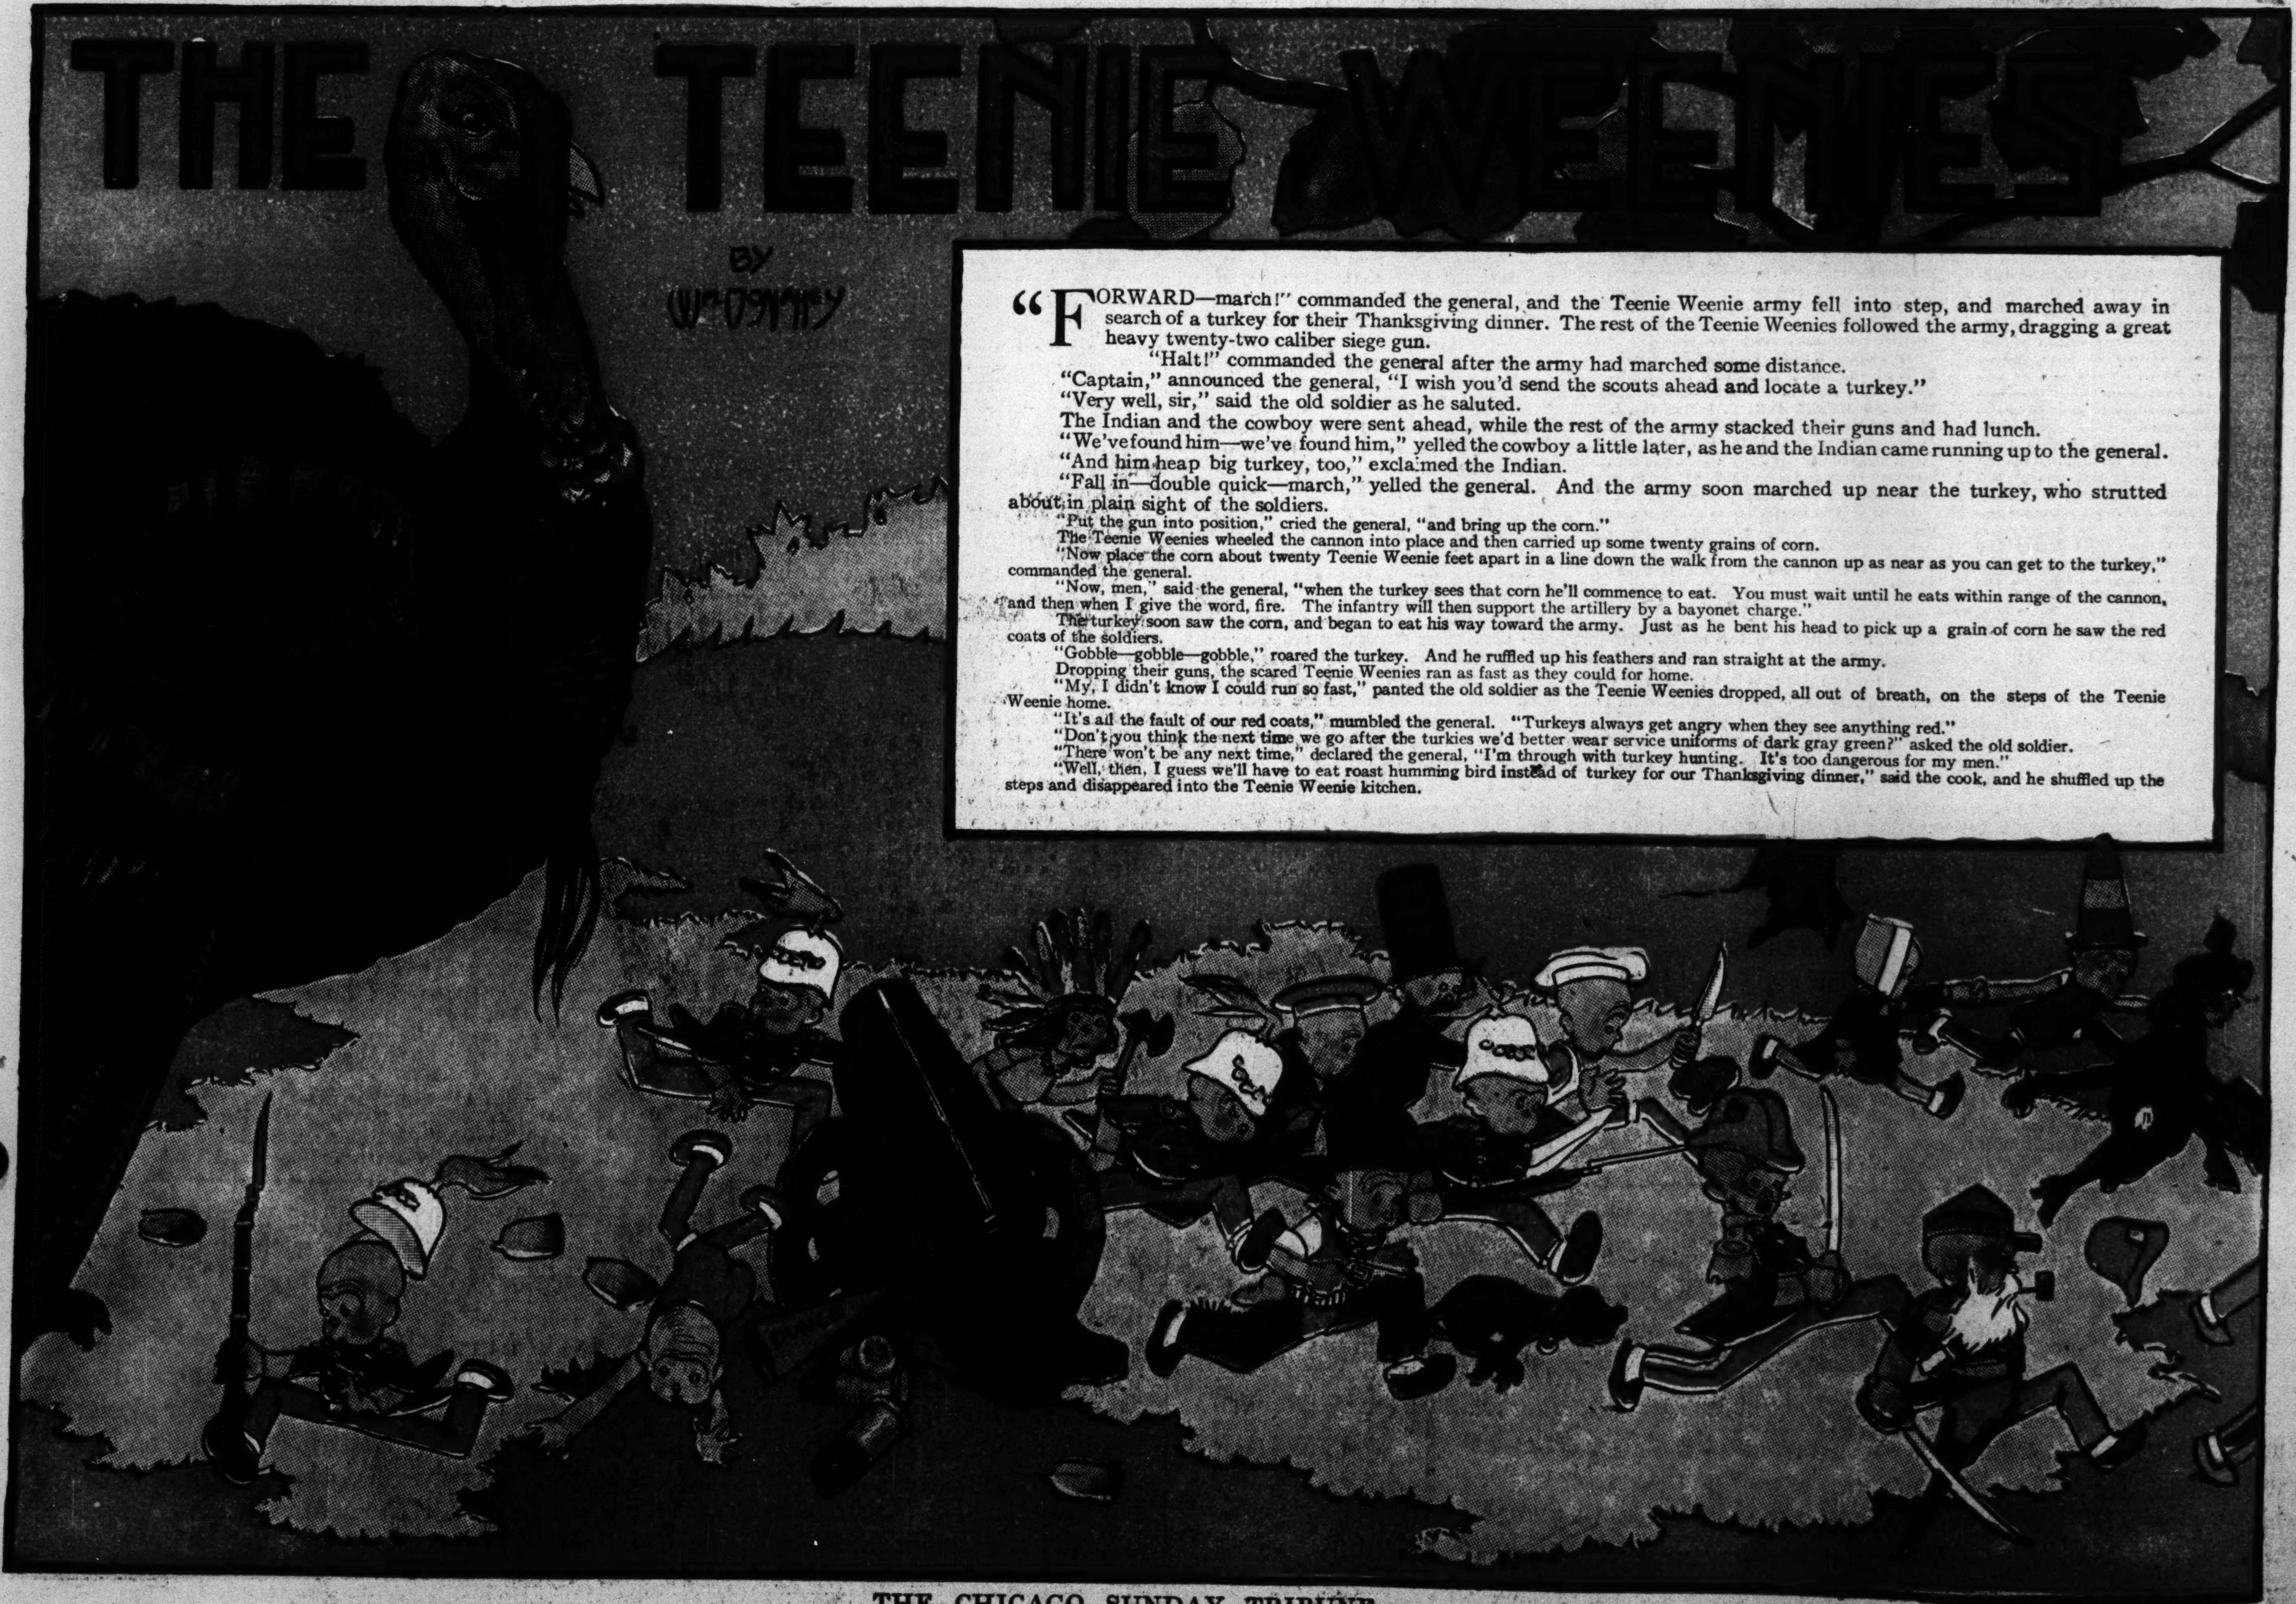
All night long Obed and Amos kept a light in the Jack o' Lantern and held him in the window, but the Indians did not dare to come back to the home of the "Great Fire Spirit."

In the early dawn the father returned. He had been obliged to care for his sick neighbor all through the night. When he heard how they had all been saved from the Indians he said, "We must always have a Jack o' Lantern at our Thanksgiving feast." "Yes," said the mother, "and we are truly grateful to the good God for sparing our lives, for he guided the children to use their Jack o' Lantern for our protection."

And you may be sure that family had a very happy Thanksgiving day, and the Jack o' Lantern held the place of honor upon their table.

(Retold from "The Child Life in Many Lands," a third reader, by Etta Austin Blaisdell and Mary Frances Blaisdell, published by the Macmillan company.)



THE TEENIE WEENIES

BY WM. DONAHEY

"FORWARD—march!" commanded the general, and the Teenie Weenie army fell into step, and marched away in search of a turkey for their Thanksgiving dinner. The rest of the Teenie Weenies followed the army, dragging a great heavy twenty-two caliber siege gun.

"Halt!" commanded the general after the army had marched some distance.

"Captain," announced the general, "I wish you'd send the scouts ahead and locate a turkey."

"Very well, sir," said the old soldier as he saluted.

The Indian and the cowboy were sent ahead, while the rest of the army stacked their guns and had lunch.

"We've found him—we've found him," yelled the cowboy a little later, as he and the Indian came running up to the general.

"And him heap big turkey, too," exclaimed the Indian.

"Fall in—double quick—march," yelled the general. And the army soon marched up near the turkey, who strutted about in plain sight of the soldiers.

"Put the gun into position," cried the general, "and bring up the corn."

The Teenie Weenies wheeled the cannon into place and then carried up some twenty grains of corn.

"Now place the corn about twenty Teenie Weenie feet apart in a line down the walk from the cannon up as near as you can get to the turkey," commanded the general.

"Now, men," said the general, "when the turkey sees that corn he'll commence to eat. You must wait until he eats within range of the cannon, and then when I give the word, fire. The infantry will then support the artillery by a bayonet charge."

The turkey soon saw the corn, and began to eat his way toward the army. Just as he bent his head to pick up a grain of corn he saw the red coats of the soldiers.

"Gobble—gobble—gobble," roared the turkey. And he ruffled up his feathers and ran straight at the army.

Dropping their guns, the scared Teenie Weenies ran as fast as they could for home.

"My, I didn't know I could run so fast," panted the old soldier as the Teenie Weenies dropped, all out of breath, on the steps of the Teenie Weenie home.

"It's all the fault of our red coats," mumbled the general. "Turkeys always get angry when they see anything red."

"Don't you think the next time we go after the turkies we'd better wear service uniforms of dark gray green?" asked the old soldier.

"There won't be any next time," declared the general, "I'm through with turkey hunting. It's too dangerous for my men."

"Well, then, I guess we'll have to eat roast humming bird instead of turkey for our Thanksgiving dinner," said the cook, and he shuffled up the steps and disappeared into the Teenie Weenie kitchen.

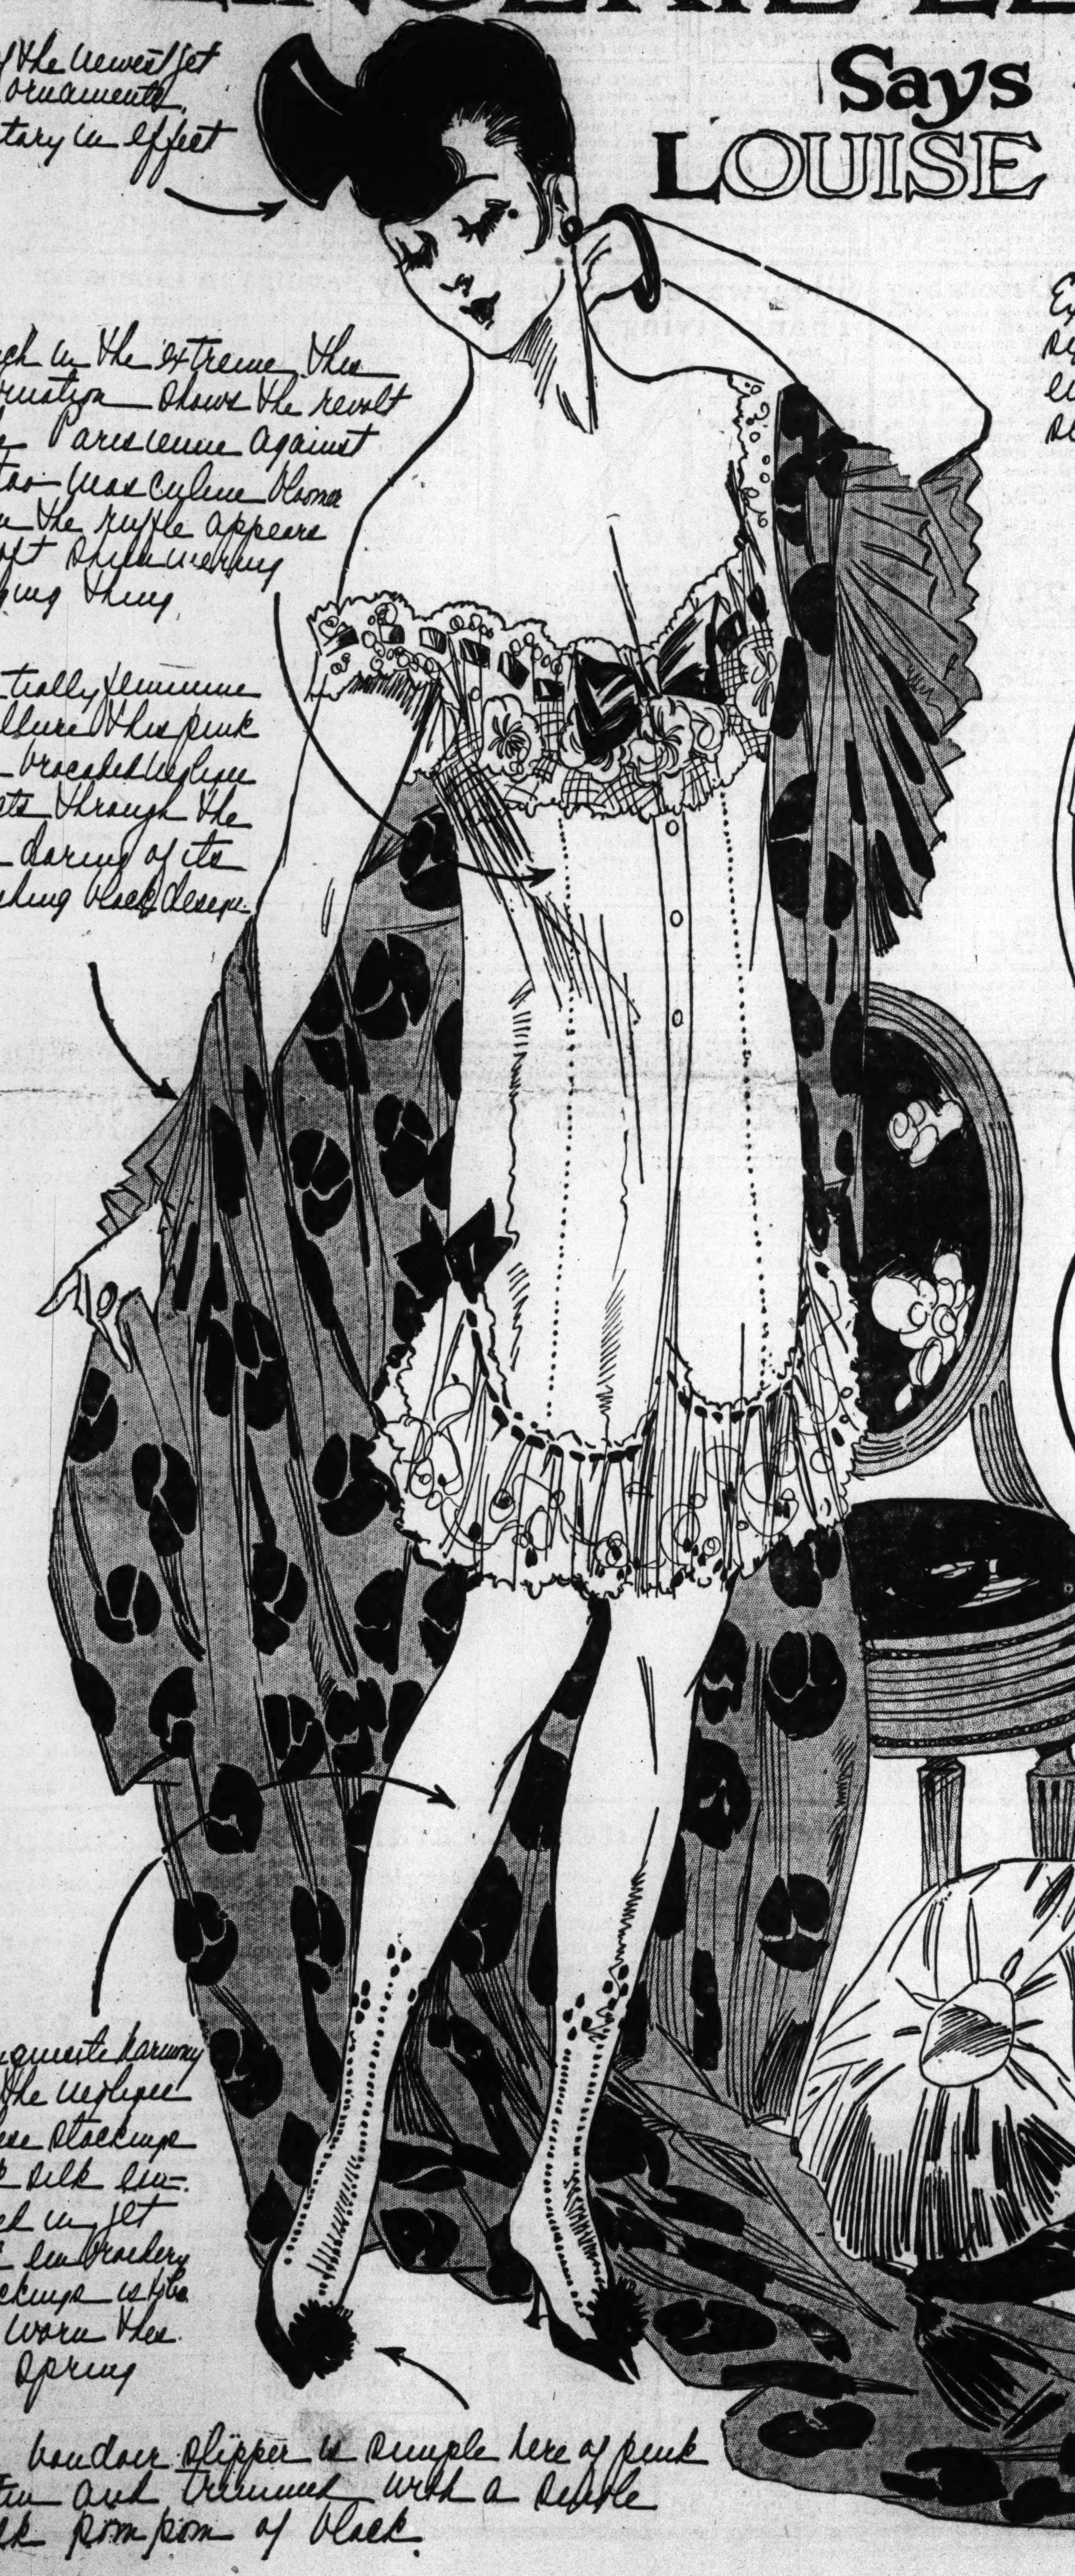
LINGERIE LESS TRIMMED

Says ~ LOUISE JAMES



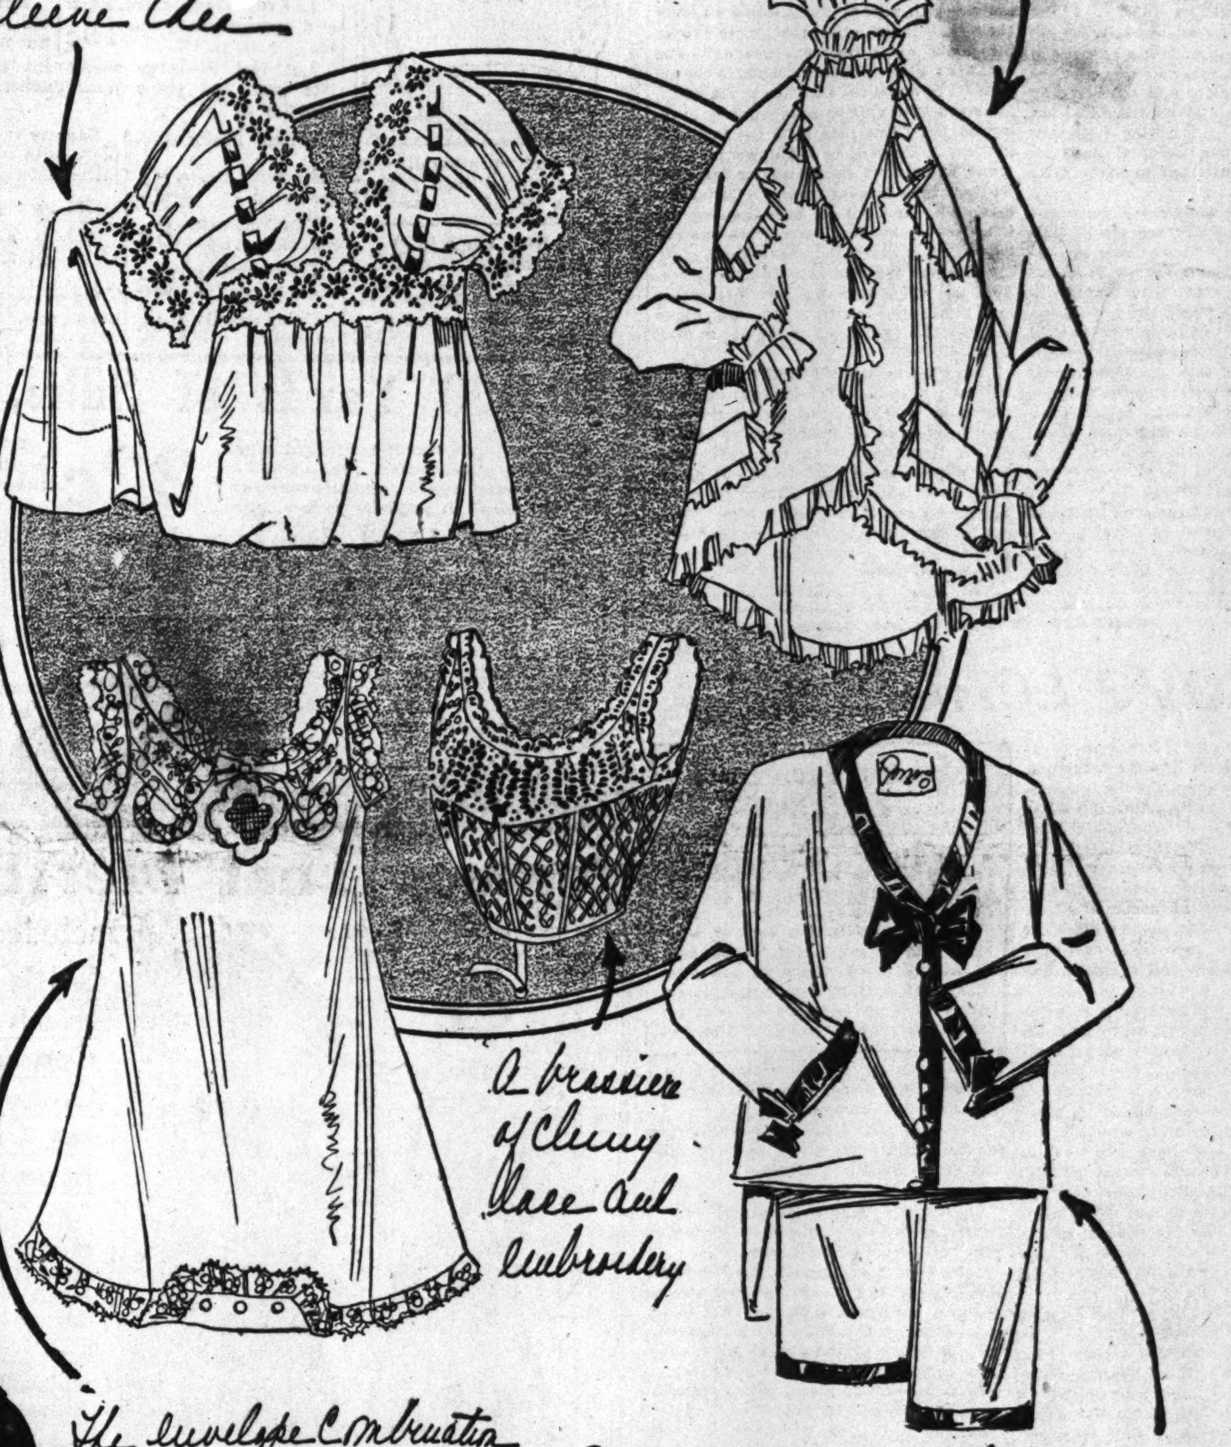
One of the newest jet hair ornaments, military in effect

French in the extreme this combination shows the revolt of the Parisienne against the too masculine bloomer. Again the ruffle appears a soft silken clinging thing

Essentially feminine in allure this pink satin brocaded negligee attracts through the sheer daring of its splashing black design

In exquisite harmony with the negligee are these stockings of pink silk embroidered in jet. Beaded embroidery in stockings is to be much worn this coming spring

The boudoir slipper is simple here of pink satin and trimmed with a single silk pom pom of black.



Exquisite night gown of silk crepe and lace which embodies the newest sleeve idea

Quakerish almost and yet full of charm this little breakfast jacket is of creme de menthe silk crepe

A brassiere of Cluny lace and embroidery

The envelope combination persists in popularity and increases in charm.

Pajamas are on the upward wave of favor just now. This pair of softest silk conceivable is bound by bands of red satin

"IS the newest French lingerie really less elaborate than that of last season?" I asked. I had heard rumors that such was the case, but I wanted to be sure.

The buyer for one of the biggest department stores in State street, and who had just returned from Paris, nodded vigorously.

"Decidedly so. We are getting the full force of the reaction against all excessive frills and furbelows. A year ago and the intimate essentials of a woman's wardrobe were extravagantly bedecked. Now the tendency is towards simplicity, which threatens to become puritanical unless it is curbed shortly."

I protested. I had not wandered at will through the specialty shops of the city and seen the lacy, frilly, adorable offerings to accept any such statements unchallenged. "But it is trimmed, and exquisitely, too," I said.

Again she nodded. "Trimmed, but less so," she corrected. "Greater stress is laid on the fineness of the lace, the chic cut of the garment, the inimitable charm of the material. One bow adorns now where formerly there would have been a row of knotted ones, or a single flower curls in the corsage where a wreath of them would have been demanded a year ago.

"Just now the Parisienne is insisting that the dominant note of femininity be achieved through a clinging silkiness of material. For always the French lingerie must be feminine, full of allure. No military touches are permitted in the intimate essentials of the French woman's wardrobe."

"And is it true that the popularity of the bloomer, the culotte, and the pantalette is waning in Paris?"

"For that very reason. They are too masculine to hold the feminine fancy. Accordingly, while we are getting the bloomer, the pantalette, and the culotte right along there is no chance of its remaining much longer in favor. It is hard to say just what will take its place. The petticoat is increasing in popularity. In fact, it never has been unpopular with the Parisienne. Its extreme femininity has enabled it to hold the interest of the volatile Parisienne. American women on the whole are much less devoted to it."

It seemed, though, a contradiction of her words when a few moments later I was initiated into the wonders of some of the newest pajamas, pairs made to order, and which I was told were the latest thing in night wear. "But they are masculine," I said.

"And the French woman does not wear them, either," she returned. "The French designer just creates them because the American woman likes them, and it is an export trade she does in them. We are filling many orders for them now, especially for trousseaux. They are perfect for traveling purposes."

The one that lingered longest in my mind of all the exquisite effects I saw was of white crêpe silk, the softest, sheerest silk I have ever felt, and which seemed indeed to crush in the hand as a Shetland shawl will do, and which one could believe would pass through a ring as easily as the Shetland article. It was banded by diminutive strips of vivid red, and then caught low in the front at the base of a V neck by a witching bow of the same shade.

Japanese effects in pajamas, however, are to be much worn this winter. They do not come so high in price as the more striking silk ones, and yet are extremely attractive.

For and By BUSINESS GIRLS

By MARY KING.

Miss King will be glad to help business girls solve their problems. She will answer letters, either through this department or by personal reply. No cent will be too small—no difficulty too great for her to consider. If you want a personal answer send a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Address Miss Mary King, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago.

AT this time of the year women who have a talent for making dainty and useful articles are busy making Christmas presents. There is a popular feeling that gifts made by the giver's own hands are more appreciated than those which are bought ready made. Most women who do clever work with their needles derive a great deal of pleasure from giving things they make themselves to their relatives and friends, and besides they find it is an economy, as there is no question but that the woman who sews and embroiders can do a great deal with a little money.

The woman at home who arranges her housework so that she can have an hour or so during the day to do sewing and fancy work and who finds it a recreation rather than a task, can make most of her Christmas gifts easily and without any strain on her eyes and nerves. But the girl who works and who probably uses her eyes under artificial light all day is unwise to attempt to make gifts for all her friends.

A friend of mine decided last year that she would surprise her friends by presenting them with articles made by herself. She had a long list of relatives and friends, so she started her Christmas work on Nov. 1, thinking she was allowing herself ample time to do it. The first two gifts she made took longer than she planned, and she saw that she would have to hurry on the rest in order to finish on time. However, even though she realized that the work she had mapped out for herself was going to be harder than she thought it would be, she refused to let her mother persuade her that it would be more sensible to buy some gifts and thus make it easier for herself.

For two months my friend worked every night until past her usual bedtime. Her Saturday afternoons were given to her sewing and occasionally she devoted a Sunday to it. A week before Christmas she admitted to her mother that she would be glad when Christmas came not only because the day itself was always a happy one for her but because it would mean the end of her constant sewing.

Christmas day was anything but a happy one for her. Her eyes pained her and her head ached so that she had to spend most of the day in bed, and the next morning was unable to go to work. The doctor her mother called in ordered her to remain in bed for two weeks. It was actually a month before she was able to return to her desk, and her physician told her frankly she was a lucky girl to have recovered from her illness as soon as she did. He scolded the girl's mother for having allowed her daughter to run the risk of making an invalid of herself for years.

When this girl started on her Christmas plans she had no idea that the work would be too hard for her. Like most women, she had an idea because she was in good health then that the extra work at night would not affect it. If she had made three or four or even five gifts in two months' time she could probably have done it with little effort and without feeling any ill effects. Business women who work all day cannot work at night for any length of time and not suffer for it. It is more than foolish to run the risk of injuring one's health, and it is a question whether the home made gifts that have caused the donor more than one headache and backache give enough pleasure to the recipients to make the sacrifice worth while.

Instead of trying to economize by making all her Christmas gifts the business girl would do well to cut down her list. Many of us have people on our lists that we do not see or hear from one Christmas to another and yet we keep them on our list because sending them gifts has become a habit and it is hard to break it off. By this process of elimination we can reduce our Christmas expenses materially, and I am sure the eliminated ones will be as glad to be dropped as we are to drop them.

I have been asked if I think it proper for business girls to contribute toward a gift for their employer. I cannot imagine anything more embarrassing to an employer than having his employés make him a present at Christmas. It places him, in a way, under obligation to his employés, and it is unfair to him. There are many ways of showing gratitude to an employer who is unusually kind besides giving him gifts.

Love Letters

Trusting and Forsaken.

The best love letter this week from a woman to a man is the following, submitted by Mrs. D. E. H., Fort Atkinson, Wis.:

In the maternity ward in a Chicago hospital the following unfinished letter was discovered under the pillow of a pathetic little 18 year old girl, who entered, we discovered later, under an assumed name. She died in the hospital, a week after her baby was born, and was taken care of, I believe by the old nurse, of whom she speaks:

"Darling—It is 6 o'clock on a glorious spring morning. The little birds are almost bursting their throats with happiness and the littlest nurse, greatly beloved by the youngest doctor, just went by my door with a 'just been kissed by him' expression. And even I, who am not aware that any one cares, can't be too unhappy, because I know you are coming! If I did not feel with all my heart that you were going to take me in your strong arms and care for me and protect me, and O, most of all, love me and love me and love me, I should not care to live; but you are, you are! Say so! Now!

"Tell me that you have been hunting for me these long, long months. Have they been as long to you, I wonder! Tell me that you have been wild with anxiety!

"It is just three months since I left. I went to the home of an old nurse who loved me when I was a little bit of a girl. She lives here with her old, old mother and she took me in without question when I told her that my husband didn't love me any more. Are you waving your arms 'round and swearin' that you do and you did? O, I hope you are! Bertha petted me and loved me and made the dearest little clothes for my baby-to-be and when it was time I slipped away to the hospital here.

"There were moments of pain and anguish, dearest, but it was all worth while for my baby. And when she came she just opened her big blue, questioning eyes, and then—God took her back again. O, dearest, dearest, don't you see why I need you so? My baby—my own little baby—I can't believe that she isn't here. My empty arms and the long empty days and nights! O, I would that I could have kept her, for I could have faced everything with my own baby in my arms.

"Even when I was a kiddie I wanted a baby of my very own and cheerfully stole any of the babies in the neighborhood whose mothers objected to my rather strenuous loving.

"Aren't you coming to take me back to you? O, sweetheart, I have nobody but you. I have wanted my mother so.

"I was only a little country girl when I came here to this wonderful, heartless city, and I was homesick and heartsick and lonely, and then—you came and life was like fairyland to this poor little 'Sis Hopkins.' You were so different—I never dreamed that there were men like you in the world.

"Then the night that the violins were calling, calling, and your eyes were calling, too, and, O, the blessed relief of being held close in your arms! If life were only a stop watch I believe I should have stopped it at that first happy hour, but then I should have missed all the glorious days to come—and the unhappy ones, too.

"I am not sorry that I gave myself to you, boy, dear. I belonged to you—but take me now, dearest; take me now!

"There's a cloud over the sun and the little birds have stopped singing. I have tried to make myself forget that I am unhappy because you never liked me that way; but I'm so tired, and I'm not well, dear.

"O, dearest, don't let me believe that what I gave from the depths of my heart was tossed aside with a laugh; don't let me believe that I have given everything that was mine to give to a hypocrite; don't let the memory of your kiss and your words of love bring with it a consciousness of your falseness.

"Forgive me, dear, for doubting you for one minute. There has been so much—and I'm so weak and tired——"

On a Journey.

"Rena," Chicago, sends the following best letter from a man to a woman.

"My Own Sweetheart: All the world and all that is in it worth while goes west tonight—my heart goes, too to watch over, and care for, and comfort that little woman who is all the world. As you rest in your berth tonight, dearie, my thoughts will be surrounding you, taking watchful care of you, petting your hair, and your lips, and your eyes, whispering to every danger that looms upon the distance that you are guarded and must not be harmed.

"As you rush along, sweet, send your thoughts back to me, your lonely sweetheart, and fill them with the love that your wonderful heart contains and gives to me—that makes me so rich, and so happy, and so wonderstruck at my fortune. Send your heart back to speak to my heart and comfort it—your lips to caress my lips that will be so quickly starved for their mates.

"Look ahead, my little lover. Look over and beyond the nights that must pass and see in your heart's mind the day that brings your lover to visit you—look ahead to that day, dearest, and help to pull it toward us faster and faster. Keep the sunshine in your eyes, dear woman, for tears in your eyes are shafts of pain in my heart.

"I'm thinking of you every minute. May God and all the angels watch over you and speed you on your journeys and always carry you safely and free from harm, and keep you always and always safe for your LOVER."

WOMEN SHAVE UNKNOWINGLY

When they are unwise enough to use so-called hair removers that merely remove hair from the surface of the skin. It is useless to remove hair unless it is attacked under the skin as well as on the skin. Actual tests by eminent physicians have proven that this result can only be accomplished by the use of De Miracle. The mere fact that De Miracle is the only hair remover that has been used and recommended by reputable physicians, surgeons and dermatologists for over twelve years is positive proof of its superiority.

Remember, you are not asked to buy De Miracle on a mere promise of your money being refunded if you are not satisfied. When you buy De Miracle you get the only depilatory that has a binding guarantee in each package which entitles you to your money if it fails. Be wise, insist on De Miracle, the original liquid hair remover. Others are imitations—refuse them.

It Isn't a Pretty Picture, But It Exercises Every Muscle - Says Lillian Russell.

THERE is no single exercise I know of that possesses half the merits of this squatting exercise. It isn't an exercise for women alone. It is an important feature of every soldier's physical training, and it should fill five or ten minutes of every worker's day, that he or she may be made and kept physically fit for his or her work.

Stand erect with the arms at the side of the body. Then swing your arms laterally and above your head, at the same time inhaling deeply through the nostrils, and sink the body to the floor in a squatting posture, bending the knees sharply until the thighs and legs are doubled upon each other and the weight of the entire body is supported by the toes. Then assume standing position again and swing the arms to the side of the body and exhale with force. The trunk must be held perfectly erect throughout the movement.

You may find this exercise difficult at first. But don't give up with a single trial or two.

If at first you cannot hold your head and assume the squatting posture at the same time practice for a few times just the squatting posture with hands resting on hips. When you can do this easily, add the arm swinging movement.

Begin practicing the movements five times every morning and evening, in fresh air if possible. Gradually increase to twenty times morning and night. Remember that the inhaling of fresh air is a most important feature of the exercise.

Just enough space in which to stand and give full swing to the arms is all the room necessary to practice this exercise.

I could give you a hundred reasons why you should make this exercise as much a part of your daily curriculum as your meals and bath.

It brings into action every muscle of the body.

It fills the lungs with fresh air and rids them of impure air.

It gives the performer good poise and erect position.

It develops beauty of outline and figure.

It gives grace, strength, and better carriage to the body.

It expands the chest.

It develops arm and bust and neck.

It strengthens the muscles of the spine and abdomen.

It reduces superfluous abdominal fat.

It strengthens the ankles.

It increases the flexibility of the knee joint.

It brings into play all the extensors of the back.

It improves oxygenation and circulation of the blood.

It aids digestion.

It helps to cure constipation.

It improves the skin and complexion.

It lessens nervousness.

It improves the appetite.

It makes the thin plump and the fat less fat.

It is most beneficial in cases of tubercular tendency.

It increases lung capacity and strengthens the range of a singer's voice.

It improves intonation.

It expands the nasal cavities.

It improves nasal catarrh, also catarrhal condition of the stomach and intestines.

It wards off coughs and colds by strengthening resisting power of the lungs.

It establishes a bulwark against the invasion of microbes.

It makes cheeks rosy.

It makes for better humor.

It makes life brighter.

It makes for better business capacity.

It stands for health, strength, and beauty.

It is the cheapest medicine and tonic on record.

Lillian Russell's Beauty Secrets.

DARK EYES: Here are some good exercises for reducing double chin: Throw the head back with force as far as possible, putting all the muscles on the stretch, then move the head to one side and then to the other. Repeat this exercise ten times. This strengthens the muscles and will remedy a double chin. The blowing exercise is also good. All that you must do is to lift your head and blow at a bit of imaginary thistledown, keeping the chin in the air for about five minutes, supposing the thistledown to be first on one side and then on the other. Try this before your mirror and see how it rounds out your neck and tightens the muscles. Another good exercise is throwing the head back with force, then bringing it forward, then back again, repeating many times. If you will send me a stamped addressed envelope I shall send you formula for astringent lotion for reducing enlarged pores.

J. D.: I would not advise you to use epsom salts on your face every day. It may keep the skin soft for a while, but later it will make it dry, rough, and wrinkled.

AGNES: The cream does not agree with your skin or it would not make your face rough and scaly. Better discontinue using it. I shall be happy to send you formula for skin food.

B. X.: Indigestion is one of the causes of an impure breath. Girls who suffer from sick headaches often have this affliction. Overwork, sedentary habits, worry, hurry, and the habit of bolting the food all have a tendency to cause this disturbance. Imperfect teeth may also be the cause. See that your teeth are in perfect condition, and if they are not have them attended to immediately. Wash your mouth out after each meal with a good mouth wash. This will give only temporary relief, for in this case, as in many others, the cause must be cured before the trouble can be removed.

MURIEL: Dandruff is a disease of the scalp. Nearly every one has a small amount of dandruff, and it is not injurious to the hair if it is loose and there is not a great deal of it. When it forms a hard crust over the scalp, then it is injurious. It prevents the hair from getting the proper nourishment and the hair falls and becomes dull. The fever is probably the cause of your hair falling, and it may also be the cause of the dandruff. Be sure you remove all the dandruff from the scalp when shampooing the hair. The best way to remove it is with a small brush. The brush must not be too stiff or it may scratch the scalp. The article you mention is proprietary and I am unable to give information on it. I would also advise a good hair tonic, and I shall gladly send you the formula for one if you will send me a stamped addressed envelope.

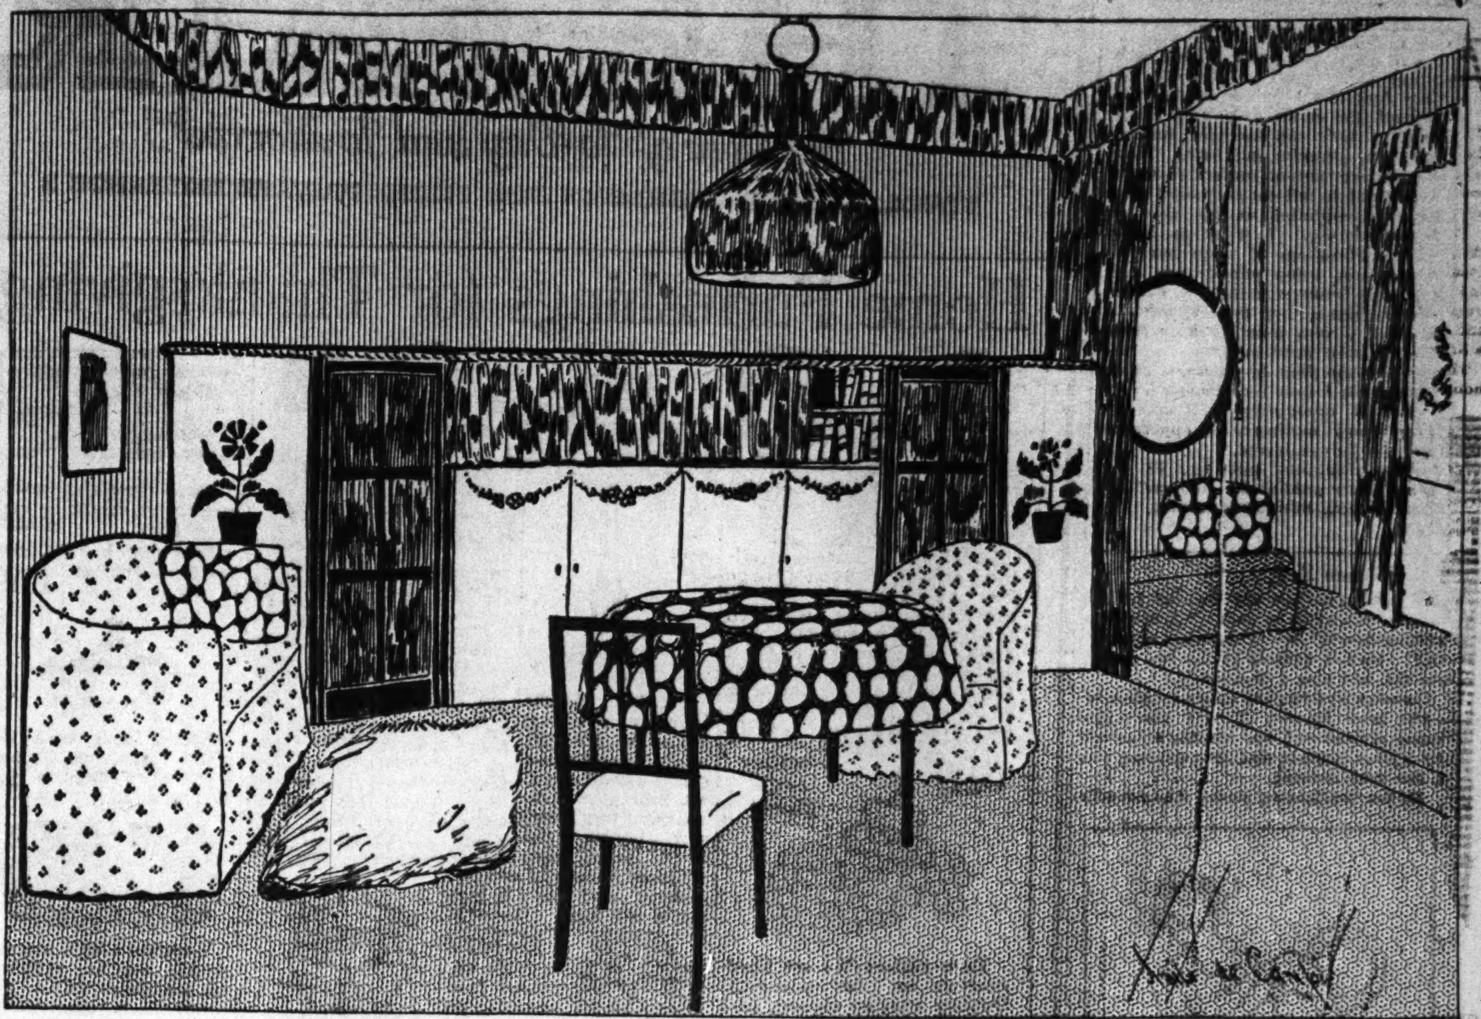
F. D.: A good lotion for enlarged pores is four ounces witch hazel and one dram boric acid. After washing the face in warm water and good, pure soap, dry carefully and apply this lotion with a soft piece of linen. The skin must be thoroughly cleansed before using this lotion.

The Home Harmonious

New Ideas in Drapery

Anita de Campi

Have you a house furnishing or home decorating problem upon which you need assistance? "The Sunday Tribune" puts at the disposal of its readers the experience and cultivated art sense of Miss de Campi, who will conduct this department. Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any of her problems pertaining to interior decoration. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.



AS lingerie is to a woman's wardrobe, so draperies of all sorts are to her home—quite indispensable. Fashions in draperies are constantly changing. This year, one rule stands firm in the midst of all other variations, and that is that folds shall hang straight—no looping up and draping back—whatever the material may be it must be in straight folds.

This much may be stated and commended in the same breath. As to the rest, some of the new fashions are hardly to be advocated, yet they certainly will be followed, as new fashions always are.

One in particular is the fad for flouncing. It is running rampant among the decorators both at home and abroad, having been a noticeable feature of the international exhibitions of decorative interiors held in Austria last July.

The fad for flouncing found its origin in the lambrequins used in medieval beds and later known as "petticoat lambrequins." The medieval beds were always inclosed in curtains hanging from wooden frame work. When gathered window shades were first used in Italy the lambrequins were transferred from beds to windows to conceal the clumsy looping up of the shades.

Now we have not only gone back to the style of having the lambrequin or plaited valance (a flounce in other words) on our windows and doors but we go to the full limit of the space at hand and extend the valance at the height of the side wall clear around the room. Voila! The latest thing in drapery!

Reference to the accompanying illustration confirms this surprising fashion. The valance, in this instance, is made of printed linen. The woodwork is white. A wide wood molding is seen above the valance and the valance itself is adjusted under narrow white picture molding. The printed blue linen, heavily lined, serves as portieres for the alcove shown and repeats itself again in slip covers on the furniture. The valance indicated on the window is on a separate rod, so that the curtains of the same material, beneath it, may be easily drawn together.

English interiors show these flounces across mantel shelves, especially in living rooms and bedrooms. A local decorator complaining of this fashion declares that decorators to be successful nowadays must almost be house dressmakers.

Grillwork of all kinds is in high disfavor. People realize now that this ugly machine made ornament was never anything but a dust catcher. Let us hope it has vanished forever. Grills are taken out of open doorways, the curtain rods are raised to the height of the door frame, making the portieres longer than they have been heretofore. In instances where the door frames are high and drop ceilings have been used, the upper parts of the portieres are made of material to match the color of the frieze, and the lower part, the color of the side wall. For instance, a deep blue velour portiere may have a pale blue or cream silk top to the depth of the drop of the ceiling, making the tint of the frieze as well as the side wall continuous around the room. Generally speaking, the portieres should match the side wall rather than contrast it.

On door frames, without doors, where portieres that are used are too narrow to be really drawn together, but always hang drawn back against the frame, curtain rods are now being dispensed with altogether, and long portieres keep their place against the door frames in this way: One large ring is placed near the top of the door frame at either side and one end of the narrow portiere is drawn through this ring, allowing the goods to hang in perfectly simple fashion. It no longer pretends to be anything but a drapery to soften the line of the frame. Its decorative value as such is recognized, and the deception of its possible usefulness is avoided. In length more than double the height of the doorway is required, as the two ends of the material trail on the floor.

It was Jacques Ruhlman who originated this idea. "You want portieres that are forever drawn back?" he said. "Very well then, have them frankly held in this way," and he placed a ring on the door frame and pulled the portiere through it.

Riskilem portieres lend themselves well to this new arrangement, as they are usually nearly double the door length. The ring in Ruhlman's doorway hung from an ornament much like the rings that are seen in old fashioned door knockers. In diameter it was about five inches.

In many instances portieres are being set aside in favor of French doors, which serve the double purpose of keeping out drafts and letting in light. A new method of treating the French door is to shir on to it a two-thirds curtain of thin muslin. This curtain is to be applied only to the lower two-thirds of the door, allowing the light to come clear through the tops. In rooms where privacy is required portieres of velour on rods with cords and pulleys are adjusted to the door and drawn or not, as occasion requires. The rods and rings for these adjustable portieres are placed both at the top and bottom on the doors. Where French doors are in use architects are reverting to the old type of French windows broken into small panes. Even plate glass windows are being done over into small panes.

This is done by subdividing the windows (without cutting them) into a network of narrow lead moldings. Stained glass manufacturers are now making these lead networks to fit any windows. They are adjusted close to the glass and are most effective when used in remodeling on windows and the glass doors of book cases. The curtains should be in some deep color and of the sort that are adjusted by pulley cords. Lace curtains are out of keeping with this type of window.

Doris Blake Says

"A line should be drawn at the kind of a play a girl in her teens is allowed to see."

Articles by Doris Blake and her replies to letters appear every day in "The Daily Tribune."

I'M not a prude on things theatrical. I'm heartily against any puritannical rule that forbids young girls to attend the theater. First, because there are many clean, sweet, and refreshing plays on the stage today that are good for a moral, healthy young girl to see. Second, because I don't believe that any wholesome pleasure that youth is entitled to should be made prohibitive.

But I don't believe that any person with any sense of the fitness of things can attend a matinée performance of a modern problem play without realizing that there is something radically wrong in either the watchfulness or the point of view of many mothers.

I attended a matinée recently here in Chicago. It was a problem play, and it contained a terrible lesson for extravagant and pleasure loving wives. The nastiest phase of life that even the most matured person can look upon was there portrayed in an alluring setting.

In the boxes I saw young girls. Throughout the house I saw more young girls ranging from 12 to 16—not a few of them, mind you, but they were there by the hundreds—and they were literally drinking in situations and conversation that made even me, with my broad experience with the world, blush with shame and indignation.

Young boys were there, too, who had no more business at that performance than the girls; but perhaps because I am a woman it hurt me more to see young girls there listening to things they should not hear and seeing things they should not see.

If any mother believes her young girl is going to profit by the moral lesson of a sordid sex play she is under a terribly erroneous impression.

What a young girl really takes away from the theater after she has been dragged through realistic dirt and mire for two hours is a soiled mind and a dangerous misconstruction on the problems of sex.

There is no legitimate excuse for a mother allowing her young girl to see any portrayal of life that sets the married relation at defiance or that makes light of the marriage tie.

If it be true, as I have heard some parents protest, that they don't know of their daughter's presence at these disturbing performances, the great crime it is for the parents. If a mother confesses she doesn't know where her daughter goes or where she is when she leaves home, she confesses her failure as a mother.

A mother's protest that she is in ignorance of the nature of the play her young girl attends is not a legitimate excuse, for opportunity to find out is easily at hand; and even if it weren't, the preservation of a young girl's morals should be a vital enough problem for a mother to make it her business to find out.

How I Reduced My Flesh.

For over three years I have been giving instructions how to reduce flesh to the women of America through the columns of The Tribune. I have recommended various exercises, dietaries, and baths. Now I want my women readers to write to me and to tell me just what they have accomplished in the way of flesh reducing. I want to know what instructions of mine you followed, how many pounds you succeeded in losing, and the time it took to rid yourself of the superfluous weight. I also want to hear from women who have succeeded in reducing their flesh by measures other than those I have recommended.

Letters containing references to proprietary medicines or apparatus will not be considered.

The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Lillian Russell, Sunday Tribune, Chicago.

The Kitchen Sink.

A few years ago my dearest friends openly remarked to me: "Aren't you getting stout?" or "Fat, fair, and forty, eh?" Now I confess to the two latter, but fat, uh! how I dreaded it.

I tried everything any one recommended—and grew stouter. Finally the tango craze arrived and one Sunday an article by Lillian Russell said that dancing was a fine flesh reducer.

Me for the dancing class! And not only that, but I danced upstairs and down again. I danced making beds, forward and back, from dining room to kitchen, in fact, while doing all the housework, even to washing dishes.

The result is wonderful. I am as willowy as a girl of 16. I owe Lillian Russell a debt of gratitude. L. B. S.

Hops Reduce Flesh.

I reduced my weight from 152 pounds to 148 by using this simple exercise: Every morning after breakfast I hopped on one foot sixteen counts, then sixteen on the other, then eight counts on each separately, then four on each, two on each, and one on each. In two weeks I had lost four pounds by using this exercise every morning. L. P.

"Skinned the Cat."

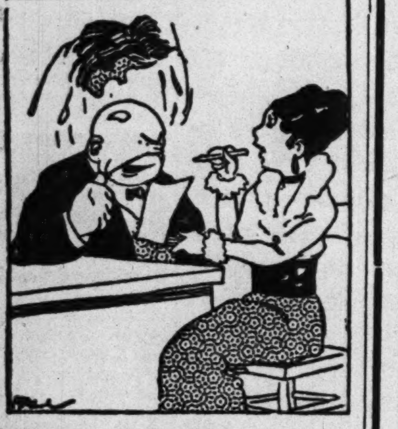
I reduced my weight from 170 pounds to 140 this summer. We live in the country, and as no one lives near us, I put up a trapeze in the back yard. I reduced my hips by "skinning the cat" twenty times before breakfast and twenty times before supper. Just before going to bed I would "skip the rope" a hundred times, then take a hot bath. I continued this for four weeks and I lost thirty pounds. Since then I have never regained it. I. K.

The Queerest Man I Ever Worked For.

Many business girls have had queer employers at some time or other during their business careers and some of these men have the most unexpected eccentricities. Those of us who have been in business life for many years probably know a number of such queer characters. "The Sunday Tribune" will pay $1 for each letter published on the subject of "The Queerest Man I Ever Worked For." Address letters to Miss Mary King, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago.

Threw His Wig.

My first position as stenographer was in the employ of a man whose one eccentricity, while rather terrifying at first, soon became a source of entertainment, to which I looked forward. On the first day of my employ I noticed what a thick head of hair he had—iron gray and very bushy.



This being my first position, I was rather nervous and consequently slow at taking a dictation. Several times I was obliged to ask him to repeat what he had said. Finally, with a roar like a bull, he snatched wildly at his head, and the shock of iron gray hair went flying into a corner, leaving a smooth and glistening pate to confront my astonished eyes. He glared at me for a moment, then mildly requested me to pick it up. When I had meekly done so, dusting it off carefully before handing it to him, he thanked me with a beaming smile.

After that I grew quite accustomed to seeing the wig fly across the room whenever he became irritated, but as it always seemed to relieve his feelings I grew quite reconciled to the action. R. R.

Tore Up Money.

My boss was the greatest one for tearing up paper. He tore up many orders the clerk brought in, and one day was standing thinking and absent mindedly tore a $20 bill to tiny bits. Kate.

One Ton of Type is turned out each week by this monotype machine for the use of Tribune advertisers.

That is one reason why ads set up in the Composing Room of The Tribune have such a clean, clear, neat appearance.

The smaller sized type in advertisements set by The Tribune is used only once—then melted up and fresh type cast.

The monotype machine casts 200 different type faces, most of them ranging from 6 point to 36 point.

The type, when cast, is distributed among more than a thousand cases. Over 50 tons of this type is kept on hand, and the machine works 16 hours a day manufacturing more to take the place of that used.

This type-making machine enables The Tribune "Ad Room" to meet many an emergency that would "stump" an ordinary shop. For instance, 400 corners of unusual shape were needed for the "boxes" in a double-page advertisement. No print shop in the United States had that many in stock, but the monotype machine cast the required number within half an hour.

By attention to every minute detail The Tribune strives to give readers and advertisers perfect service.

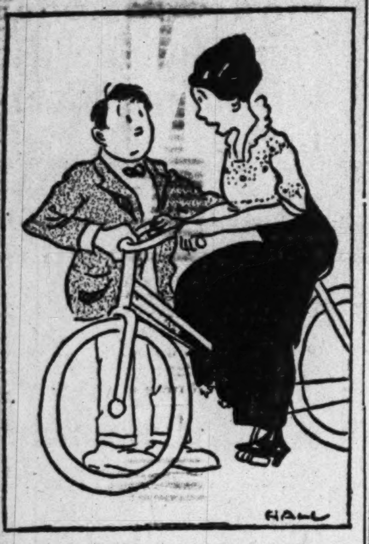
Were You Married Through Flirting?

I have received a number of vigorous protests in my mail against a statement I made recently that flirting is a losing game for women every time. In every case the protesting correspondent cites as evidence of the error of my statement hi. or her own happy marriage, which resulted from a flirtation. I want to hear from other readers on this subject. I want personal experiences only. Did you find flirting a losing game or not? The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Doris Blake, Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Wabbled Into Marriage.

At the age of 35 I was a successful practicing woman physician, with plenty of money, but O, so lonely! At that time the bicycle craze was sweeping the country and I decided to learn to ride.

With this end in view I went to a large hall used as a place to learn and started in. While awkwardly trying to balance myself on a wheel I noticed a good looking young man watching me. I wabbled so badly just as I got in front of him that to save me from what seemed to be a bad fall he caught my wheel. Then as I continued to wabble he continued to assist me, and before I left the hall we had become so well acquainted that I asked him to call.



He was without exception the finest man I ever knew, and in one year's time we were married, and neither one ever had cause to regret that bicycle flirtation.

MRS. O. C. P.

He Wouldn't Stop.

I became acquainted with my husband through a flirtation and the result was a very unhappy married life. We had not been married three months when I found out he was flirting with other women. After one year of a stormy married life we separated and a divorce ended our unhappy life together. That one experience was enough for me, and I have never flirted again.

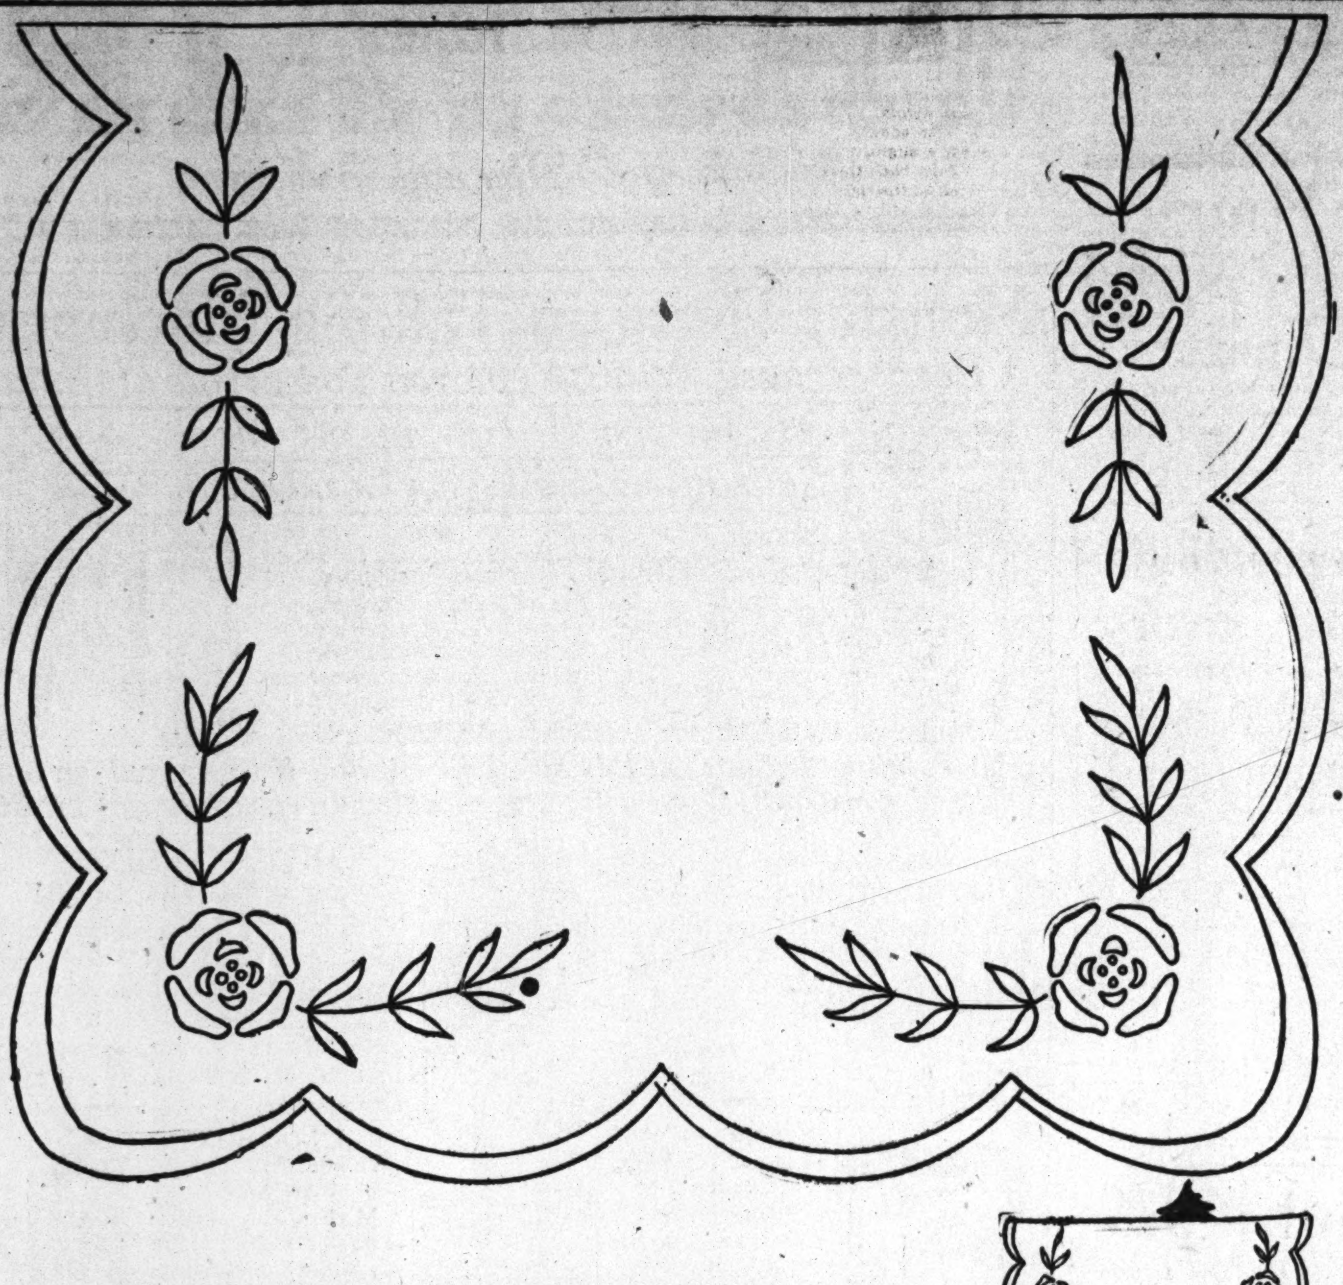
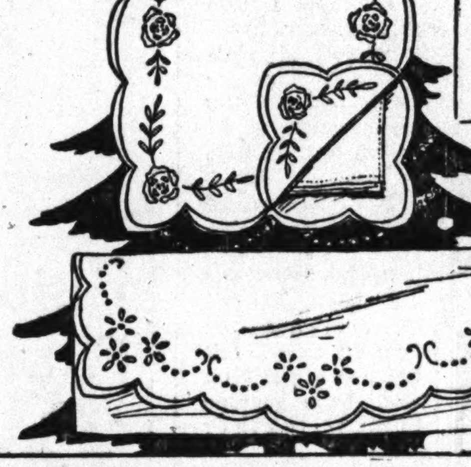
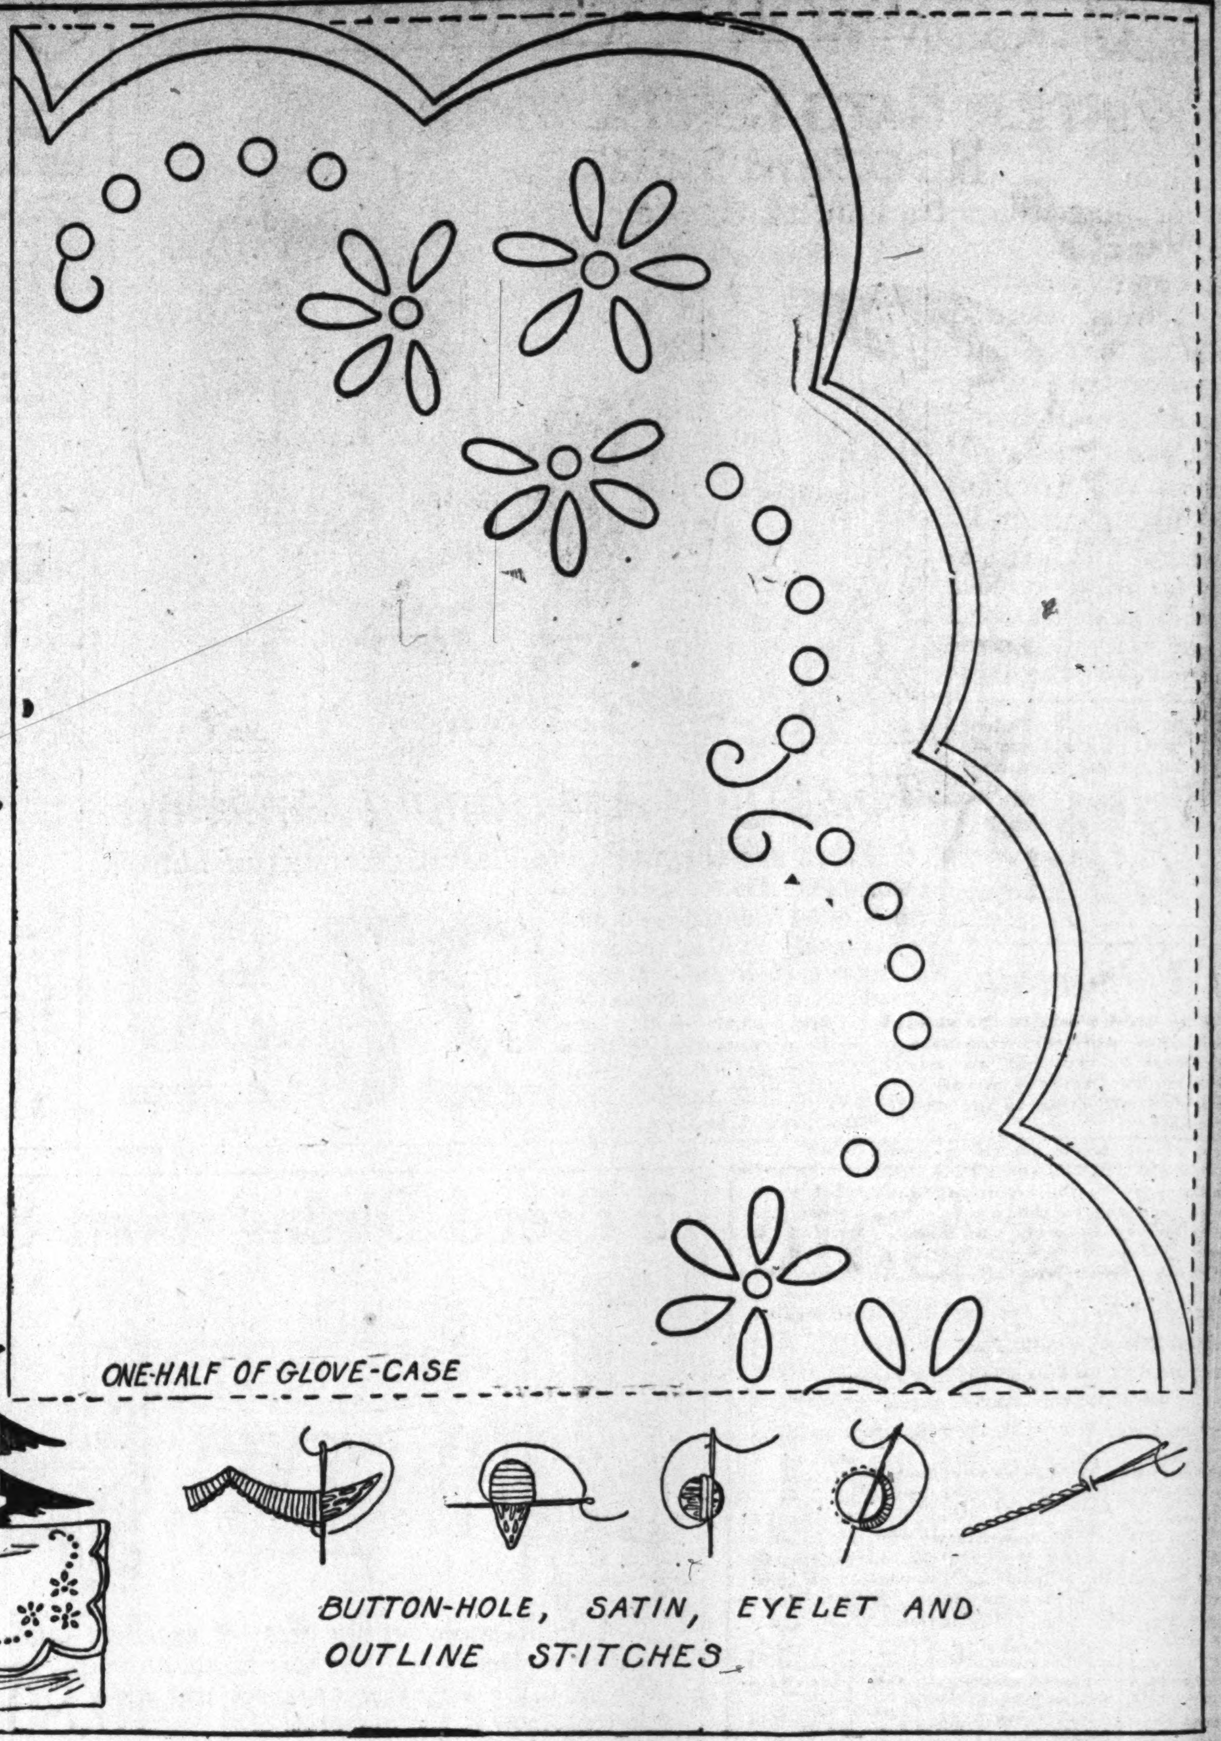
Design for Christmas Handkerchief and Glove Case.







ONE-HALF OF GLOVE-CASE
BUTTON-HOLE, SATIN, EYELET AND OUTLINE STITCHES

A design for a handkerchief case or a glove case. The color is a matter of personal judgment. The handkerchief case should be stamped on a double fold of cloth, the glove case on a triple fold.

The design is to be worked in buttonhole, satin, eyelet, and outline stitches.

There are two ways to apply the design to the material upon which it is to be worked. If your material is sheer, the simplest method is to lay the material over the design and with a sharply pointed pencil draw over each line. If your material is heavy, secure a piece of transfer or impression paper. Lay it face down upon this, then draw over each line of the paper design with a hard pencil or the point of a steel knitting needle. Upon lifting the pattern and transfer paper you will find a neat and accurate outline of the design upon your material.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

EDITED BY JANE EDDINGTON

Cut these out and paste them in your scrap book. Cut them out by the single column, as at times the cook book will be printed in two columns and at other times more.

Jane Eddington's articles are printed every day in "The Daily Tribune."

So set is the fashion of stuffing roast chickens, ducks, geese, and turkeys, that perhaps few cooks have reasoned out the why of it. Yet many eaters have hated stuffing from their youth up. If wet and soggy and sage struck it is horrid. If dry and crumbly it is not good. If finely flavored with onion it is not as good as a slice of toasted bread served with fried or stewed onions.

In theory we extend the turkey or chicken by stuffing it. In practice the cooking is seldom so well done that the juices of the bird penetrate the stuffing to any extent. Basting must be constant, and even so it is questionable whether the using of the juices of the poultry to this end is worth while. Is the meat not better for their complete retention in it?

Foreign cooks quite universally use as a dressing or stuffing (farci) a highly seasoned meat mince, meat ground fine and then pounded to a paste. Numerous and most precious seasonings are used in these minces, and they often rank with or even above the meat of the breast in delicacy. We are not equal to such things for several reasons, but such stuffings season far better than do our soggy mixtures of bread the fish or flesh or fowl into which they are sewed or tied.

In one of the newest and best books out on cooking there is the following statement: "Poultry roasted without stuffing is more delicious than when stuffed, because the birds can be cooked more quickly and are therefore more juicy. If stuffing is liked, it should be cooked in the roasting pan at one side and not in the bird."

Leaving out the stuffing from our Thanksgiving turkey leaves us with one thing less to eat, and this is worth our attention, since we so habitually overeat on this and other holidays, partly because we eat so many bread things with the different dishes. It is an excellent plan to practice the fadeaway on our Thanksgiving menu. Let the soup be light and in cups. If we have a fruit cocktail, let it be scanty, not big enough to serve in the skin of half a grapefruit. Let our vegetables be prepared in some dainty form and served to garnish as well as to accompany our turkey. As we approach the end let us not multiply choices of pies, cakes, etc.

Mashed Potatoes.

There is one essential thing to remember about mashed potato which we so universally serve; it is that it must not be allowed to stand after it has been mashed and seasoned. It loses all its quality by so doing. So true is this that thousands of people do not know what true mashed potato is. If it must be prepared beforehand, pack it into a hot earthen dish, brush the top with butter or egg, and put into the oven for ten minutes. A tablespoon of cream to each two potatoes and an ounce of butter to four medium potatoes seasons them well, with the salt and perhaps pepper. It is best to have the cream hot, or hot milk may be used instead with a little more butter.

Potatoes Baked and Stuffed.

Potatoes prepared in a little different way from those sometimes put in to bake with a roast, in the last hour, may be done as follows: Peel as many potatoes of medium size as are needed, making them egg shaped or pyramidal, or in any form you please. Cut off one end so that they will stand and make them with the roast or by themselves. When done cut off the top, dip out the pulp, mash, and season, refill the potatoes, put on caps or part cut off, set in oven ten minutes, and then pour some melted butter over them before serving. Butter, cream, and egg yolk may be used to season the inside and some finely chopped meat or bacon and some chopped mushroom may be added. These may be made a decorative garnish.

Potato Noisettes.

Noisette means nut, a hazel nut, and vegetable noisettes are little vegetable spheres the size of a hazel nut cut out with a tiny scoop or round spoon cutter. One advantage of these is that they may be cooked quickly and are decorative. The cooking may be done in ten or twelve minutes. The cutting out takes some time and skill, but remember that the word used for this cutting is "turning," and the knack can soon be acquired. The scoop is buried in the vegetable and turned.

Fried potato noisettes are pretty and may be simply cooked in butter until a light brown, or in the pan with the roast, where they must be stirred and turned so as to brown on all sides.

Another way is to boil the little pieces for eight or ten minutes, just covering with cold water, to make them more mealy, and quickly brought to a boil. These can be drained and finished with butter or added to a sauce. In either case potatoes so prepared can stand in the oven covered and not lose in flavor as do mashed potatoes.

Boiled Onions.

Small onions boiled in meat stock, boiled away and reduced to glaze, are delicious, but some butter or bacon with a little sugar and water may be used instead, just enough liquid to cover, so that it will all be boiled away. Cooked in plain salted water and served in a little hot cream they are delicious, but cannot so well be used as a garnish. Small onions will cook from twenty minutes to half an hour as follows: Remove the thin paper skin so as to leave them as comely as possible, cover with a little cold water or meat stock, boil up, then cover cooking vessel closely, and finish over the simmering burner. The steam generated helps to cook them better than in an open vessel. By all means have, for hygienic reasons, some onions on the Thanksgiving menu.

Omelet Surprise.

A simple, satisfactory way to serve the ice cream of the Thanksgiving dinner is as omelet surprise, or what some cooks call "baked Alaska," and what a certain boy is inclined to call "cake à la mode." If prepared in individual portions, which is the easiest way for the uninitiated, put a slice of sponge cake on a plate, cover with a slice of ice cream, and then cover the whole with a meringue and brown under the broiler. The great cook puts a whole long brick of ice cream on a cake cushion, masks it with stiffly beaten and sweetened white of egg, and then with some of the egg in a paper cone he makes fancy figures on it and puts the whole into a hot oven to slightly brown. Sometimes he garnishes it with lines of melted currant jelly. The whites of two eggs and a tablespoon of sugar are enough for three slices of cake and ice cream.

Marion Harland's Helping Hand. - - By Marion Harland.

Marion Harland's Helping Hand Corner appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

To many letters of appreciation have come to me lately that I wish to make space for a few of them:

"May I take this opportunity to tell you that I thoroughly enjoy the Corner? I look forward to it each week as one of the most interesting parts of the paper. There is such a number of good recipes. MRS. R. M. S."

"I want to thank you for inserting my letter concerning our need of books. Several friends were good enough to respond with some excellent books and the pleasure they will give our little village cannot be estimated. MRS. R. D. B."

This correspondent does not ask for further books, but I am quite sure that other books would be welcomed by her for the little library she is trying to start in her village and that her appreciation would be no less keen for more contributions in this line. I shall keep her address for the use of those who wish to aid her.

"To you, dear Marion Harland, and to all my other unknown friends who have lightened the weight of my burden by kind words, good wishes, books, magazines, games, etc., I offer my most grateful thanks. Such kindness gives me untold pleasure and an impulse to higher things. It makes the burdens and all the needful discipline of life lighter and easier to bear. Your Corner certainly has the right name when it is called the 'Helping Hand.' I have answered each letter accompanied by an address, but I send this to the page lest some letters may not have been received. Some correspondents offered books I would have been glad to get, but did not give any address, and still others offered books and the like if I would pay expressage. This I regretted very much that I could not do. I now have as many letters as I can answer and cannot undertake further correspondence. C. P."

The letter of this correspondent shows how prompt is the response which comes to any call of need when it is within the power of a Cornerite to reply to it.

Starting a Library.

"I saw a notice in the paper of some one who would give a box of magazines to any one who would pay the freight on them. I would gladly do this and will either send it in advance or pay it on the box when it arrives. I am starting a library and will be pleased to receive the magazines. V. H."

Another instance of my inability to give assistance because of the magazines having been bestowed elsewhere before the letter was received. I trust some one will arise who can give aid in the effort of V. H. to start the library.

Making Cloth Waterproof.

"Will one of the Cornerites kindly tell me how to make cloth waterproof? In looking over some old magazines I found a formula for such work and filed it away so carefully that I am unable to find it when I have a need for it. L. S. P."

I hope the formula for waterproofing cloth may come; it will be of use to others beside L. S. P.

Wants Quilt Pieces.

"I see that G. F. B. has pieces for a quilt. I would be glad to get them if I can. I have a book of the Titanic disaster it may be interesting for some one to have. A. D. T."

I regret that the pieces asked for have already been given away. Has some one else quilt pieces to send to this correspondent? I am sure there will be a reader who would like the book on the Titanic. I will gladly give the address to applicants.

Conspicuous Nose Pores

How to reduce them

Complexions otherwise flawless are often ruined by conspicuous nose pores.

In such cases the small muscular fibres of the nose have become weakened and do not keep the pores closed as they should be.

Instead these pores collect dirt, clog up, and become enlarged.

Begin tonight to use this treatment

Wring a cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Then finish by rubbing the nose for a few minutes with a lump of ice.

Woodbury's Facial Soap cleanses the pores. This treatment with it strengthens the muscular fibres of the nose pores so that they can contract properly. But do not expect to change in a week a condition resulting from years of neglect. Use this treatment persistently. It will gradually reduce the enlarged pores and cause them to contract until they are inconspicuous.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of a skin specialist. It costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

Do this today—Now! Tear out the illustration of the cake below and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's. Tear out the cake now. Take it to your druggist or toilet counter today. Begin tonight to get the benefits of this facial soap. For sale by dealers everywhere.

More Facts for Home-Workers

"If I told the truth as to how much I have made and am making as a result of my regular advertising in the Home Workers' Blue List, the public would not believe me, so I'll just give approximate figures."

And these are the figures:

"Over 100 of last year's customers came back to me this fall and I have already worked for more than 150 new ones. I had $97.00 worth of work left over from the last month, and, besides this, have cleared nearly $120.00. Some days I average $10.00 and others, $5.00. One inquiry has just come to me from Arkansas."

These results came from a modest beginning and show what a demand there is for satisfactory home millinery and fur work. Not many Home Workers can devote all their time to such work, but there are hundreds who have the talent and some leisure.

If you have some spare time with which you'd like to "cash in," write or call Room 534 Tribune Bldg., Home Workers' Blue List Department, Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

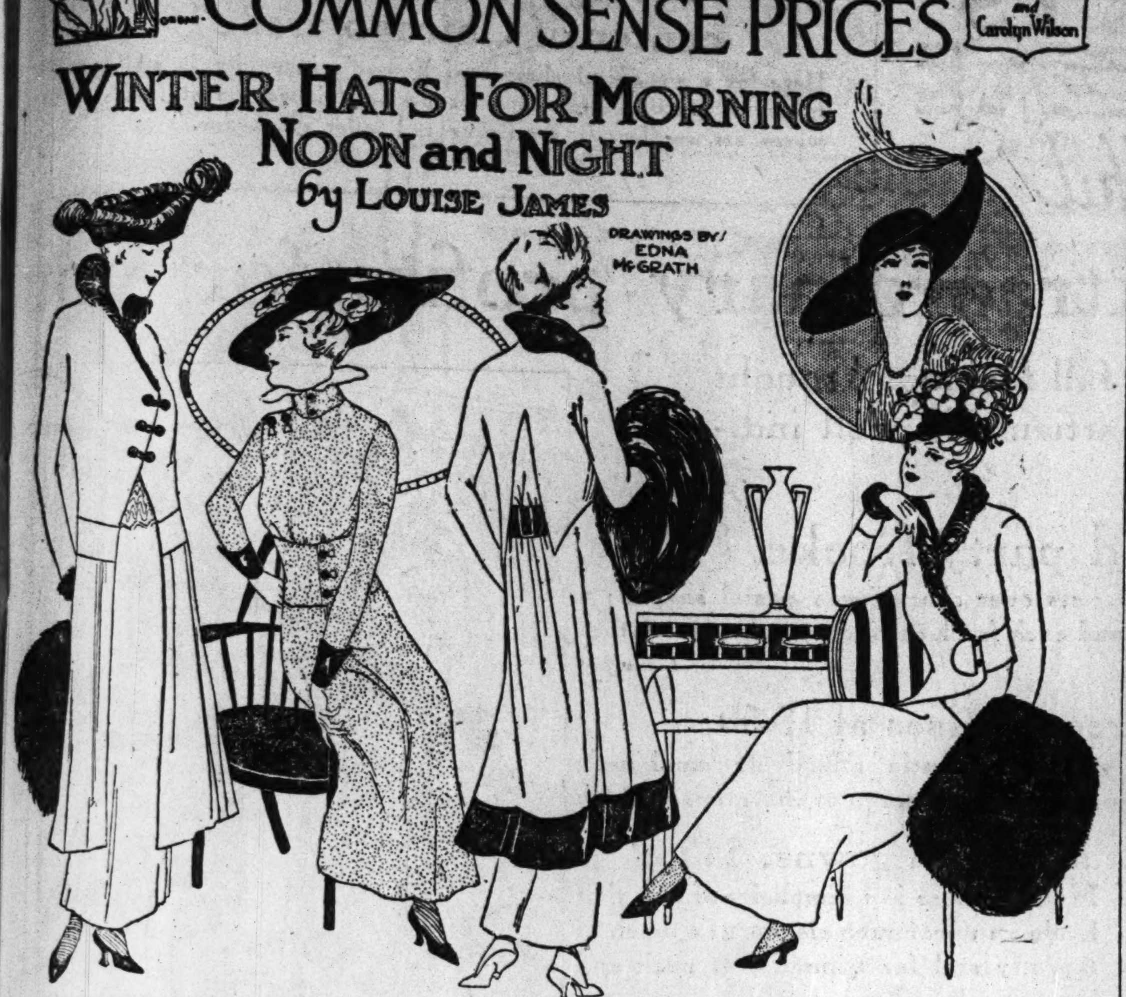
WINTER HATS FOR MORNING NOON and NIGHT

by LOUISE JAMES

DRAWINGS BY/ EDNA McGRATH



A few full plaits in the skirt, a more than necessary tightness in the skirt of the coat, an ostrich trimmed hat, and the picture seen is a style becoming to the slender woman.

A street frock which is plain and modish at the same time. The increase of button trimming adds attractiveness to the whole. One of the new wide hats which somehow remain in the minority is shown trimmed with silver roses.

New fashion notes a-plenty are to be glimpsed in this street suit. The full skirt of the coat is edged with a severely plain band of velvet, the same velvet which flares at the neck in the form of a collar.

One of the extreme shapes in hats. Not content with flaring wide on all sides, this new shape must rear upwards, too, plagiarising thereby the chief distinctive note of the saucy turban.

Severely plain is this tailored suit, content with only a bit of fur and a few scattered buttons for its trimming. The coat is short and semi-belted. Nor could anything be more demure than the small hat, flower trimmed.

THE smart winter hat is something of an anomaly this season. It seems in its lack of accessories to have achieved the apex of simplicity and yet its shape is utterly irregular and not to be depended on. In fact, it is all shapes and sizes and consequently in its varied manifestations is sure to make some kind of an appeal to every type of woman.

The hat which comes well down over the forehead, fitting the head closely, may be worn by the middle aged woman who does not care about tipping her hat back from the face and revealing masses of softly waving locks. In this particular style it is well to have the brim in front low and narrow, while at the sides and in the back it flares high and wide. I have seen this type of hat made up in various shades. The corbeau blue velvet is substantial and effective, while the Burgundy red velvet is a later shade and combines just as prettily with numbers of other colors.

In the models I have had sketched the extremely large hat at the right of the page shows one of the newest shapes. Not only does it flare wide and broad, but it has an upward tendency as well. It is not satisfied with its own conventional prerogatives, but it must plagiarize those of the small hat as well.

Again in utter contrast of size of shape is the Quakerishly demure little velvet turban with the rim of flowers about the crown. A veil of black Chantilly lace might be most exquisitely draped over this model. For there is nothing more popular than Chantilly and nothing that gives a softer shadow to the features.

Perhaps the hat which is the simplest of present day ones and at the same time generally becoming is the sailor shape. It is particularly practical, too, in that it can be worn with strictly tailored suits and also with gowns and wraps that are more elaborate. I do not mean by sailor the old fashioned sailor shape, which was so severely plain, but the moderately wide brimmed, rather high crowned, and slightly rolling affair which is usually made of velvet and flower or feather trimmed. It is not a picture shaped hat and yet it possesses much of the grace and charm of the latter variety. In several instances I have seen the sailor made of the same material as the suit. One specially attractive combination of this variety boasted the suit of Burgundy red velour gabardine, and the sailor, made to order of course, was of the same goods.

For the trimming of this shape I know of no prettier idea than a velvet poppy or pansy flower put on directly in the front and with one petal of each flower rising abruptly to moderate or extreme heights, according to the individual taste. If one wants a dressier hat, however, something for restaurant wear or for formal afternoon affairs, the large picture hats in the illustration are appropriate and typical of the styles to be worn. Ostrich feathers are back in favor again and appear in really gorgeous and artistic tones. The three and four toned feather trimmings are also good and attractive, especially when the gown worn is of the duller shades or of black.

High wired bows of black velvet are also suitable for hats of this kind. Never has a season offered velvets in a wider variety of colors, and if one keeps in mind the fact that taffetas backed velvet is a better choice than satin, not being so clumsy for the making of graceful bows, the results are sure to be satisfactory.

Ribbon, too, is smart for hat bows, especially faille ribbon, which is not too expensive and at the same time possessing every possibility for the bringing out of good effects. I have seen this same ribbon trimming on the smart tricorned effects which were worn so much in the early fall and which still continue in favor despite the effort of Dame Fashion to oust every style after its stay in favor has exceeded a full four weeks. One stylish tricorn in black velvet I saw achieved the military note by a banding of gold metallic braid twisted about the edges of the brim and caught in front by a helmet shaped ornament of the same gold braid. With this challengingly warlike headdress was worn an ultra feminine veiling which was the "fancy filet"; that is, a square mesh veil with a woven design.

Speaking of veils, I might mention as particularly attractive the "Filadora veil," which has the filet mesh with a checked border and small woven veils. It may be worn as a nose veil, which is the newer way, of course, of donning a veil, or it may be brought down tight and close under the chin. This latter fashion, by the way, is much more favored by women than the former, which has, after all, only the appeal of novelty on its side.

In the way of military trimmings, metallic birds seem to be rivaling the metallic braids and more conventional ornaments on the same order. Some of the smartest looking of these birds have been in the sphinx color and are meant primarily to be worn with suits of the identical shade.

My little niece is inclined to be very serious minded and seldom plays the games her little chums delight in. One afternoon recently she had been unusually busy and was painstakingly working over her toy desk. Several times I had attempted to draw her into conversation, until thinking to interest her I had started a little story. I had read but a few lines when Doris looked up and with a resigned expression in her eyes said: "Auntie, how do you spell interrupted?"

James, 3 years old, was cautioned not to call a former maid, of whom he was very fond, by her given name, she having recently married and residing in the neighborhood. Meeting her one day, having the caution in mind, he accosted her with this question: "Mrs. Dickson, may I come over to your house, Hattie?"

Alice, aged 4, was sent to a nearby dry goods store to buy a shirt for the baby. The clerk, not knowing what size to give her, asked, "How old is the baby?" "O" said Alice, "she's not very old; she just takes three steps and then falls."

My little niece of 3 was crying lustily one day when a neighbor's child called her to come out and play. Her mother said, "Don't you hear Lucile calling you?" Little Lillian, who was ashamed to have her playmate see her crying, answered, "Wait till the tears come out."

The nurse in charge of the 3 day old baby was saying anxiously: "I can't understand what makes this baby cry so much." "Maybe she don't know her mamma very well yet," suggested Lillian, aged 4.

My little grandson, Louis, came up to visit his aunt and myself for a week while his mother was absent from home. He was corrected and made to wash his hands before and after meals. On his return home he said: "Mamma, I'm so glad to be home; there are too many trainers for one little boy a t grandma's."

Interrupted the Prayer.

We once had a pet cat in our family which had been taught to sit upon our shoulders, no matter what attitudes we assumed. One day the minister came for family prayers. As he was on his knees, fervently invoking the divine blessing, the pet kitten, with one spring, landed upon his shoulder, startling him almost out of his wits and causing the children to snicker.

Spoiled the Breakfast.

When I was a young man I was very bashful. A party of us were out bobsled riding and lost our way, so it was nearly daylight when we got home. The mother of the girl I was with was preparing breakfast and invited me in to get warm. I drew up a chair to the stove and put my feet in the oven to warm them and to my horror discovered I had landed them in a pan of biscuits.

Thirded the Motion.

The most embarrassing moment of my life was when I joined a chapter of a lodge. I was perfectly ignorant of all such affairs, so when some one made a motion, and my friend sitting beside me said, "I second the motion," not wanting to seem indifferent, I said, quite loudly, "I third it."

Kept Them Under His Hat.

When employed by a loop firm some years ago, my employer was the recipient of four boxes of cigars from a customer to liquidate a debt. Not being a smoker he divided them among the office clerks, each of us receiving from twenty to twenty-five cigars.

Not having sufficient room for them in my vest pockets, I put the balance in my hat before leaving the office.

Being unconscious of their presence there, and meeting two lady acquaintances, I tipped my hat. As this happened on a crowded street, you can imagine my embarrassment on seeing my cigars fall about the sidewalk.

JANE BARTON The Home Dressmaker

Lingerie for Christmas Gifts.

THE girl with a knacky needle need not disturb herself what to give for Christmas. A piece of dainty lingerie will delight almost every woman friend she has, provided the selection is judicious.

A camisole, or a set of three camisoles, is just the thing for the athletic girl who likes to cover her brassieres with a simple yet dainty garment. A yard and a half of thirty-six, or, preferably, forty inch wash silk or crêpe de chine will make the set. In addition, one will need two and one-half yards of half inch wash ribbon, and elastic for the waist band.

Divide the width into three pieces. The easiest way to do this is to measure a third of the width and draw a thread of the material lengthwise as a guide for cutting. The next thread is drawn from the middle of the remaining two thirds.

Baste a half inch hem at top and bottom and hem neatly by hand. If your material is wide enough or your friend short waisted, a slightly deeper hem can be turned. Turn back the ends in a half inch hem, and on the right side sew four patent fasteners with sockets to correspond on the left end. Use the next to smallest size.

In the lower hem run a white elastic one inch shorter than the desired waist measure, and fasten securely at each end. Then sew the fastener underneath. Through the neck hem run the remainder of your ribbon, having first cut off enough for the two shoulder straps. From sixteen to eighteen inches are needed for each strap, as your friend is stout or thin. Start the strap six inches from each edge fastening the other end about twelve inches distant.

A crêpe de chine combination that is finished in the same simple yet smart hem for a casing will require about two and a half yards of thirty-six inch material for the medium size. One of the newest combinations is cut to fit the figure closely at the waist with the corset cover made with shoulder straps of ribbon like the camisole. Some of the patterns give two kinds of finish for the top. For steady use I should advise finishing the corset cover to fit over the shoulder, making the section just wide enough to hold the casing of neck and sleeves. The drawers are finished with a half inch casing through which are run elastics.

Unless sure of your measurements allow plenty of elastic and pin the ends together with the tiny safety pin. The seams are neatly Frenched. The casings at the top may be hemmed by hand, hemstitched, or added to the upper edge of entre-deux or half-inch lace insertion.

Though it means more sewing, I strongly advise adding a shield shape section under each arm and making the inside of each leg double. This may be added as an ordinary facing, being stitched, turned, and hemmed in tiny stitches on the far edge. Another finish for each leg is to baste the pieces flat to the wrong side, turn in the outer edge, and hem as previously, then bind the entire opening of the drawers with a three-quarter inch silk braid.

Two and a half yards of ribbon for neck and shoulder straps and three for the ordinary corset cover finish of neck and armholes will be required, also a yard of elastic for each leg.

An easily achieved and effective kimono may be made of crêpe de chine, wash silk plain or flowered, cotton crêpe, or, if your friend expects to go south, of silk mull or colored batiste. Where a little warmth is liked a wool batiste, challi, or albatross can be similarly treated.

Two lengths will be needed, allowing six inches extra for a three inch hem on each end. Fold the material double and slit up the middle of the front side for the fold for the opening. Cut around slightly for the neck or run a finger length down the other side.

Finish the fronts in a narrow hem—not more than an inch wide—or the edges can be rolled when the lace is joined. About eight inches from each side sew the two parts together by a line of stitching that ends about the waist line, or an inch or so above. Turn up and hem the bottom of both front and back before the side seams are sewed.

If the outer edges have a smooth selvedge the lace can be sewed directly to it without hemming. For the trimming one will need about eight yards of two and a half or three inch lace. This is used entirely around the front opening from the bottom of one side, around the neck, and down to the bottom of the other side. Round the corners of the lace into nothing at the lower edge of each front.

Trim the selvedge edges entirely around with lace, that is, start at the bottom of one side and continue the lace to the fold and down to the bottom of the other side. Round in the corners as on the fronts. Sew ribbons in several places to each side of the front to tie kimono.

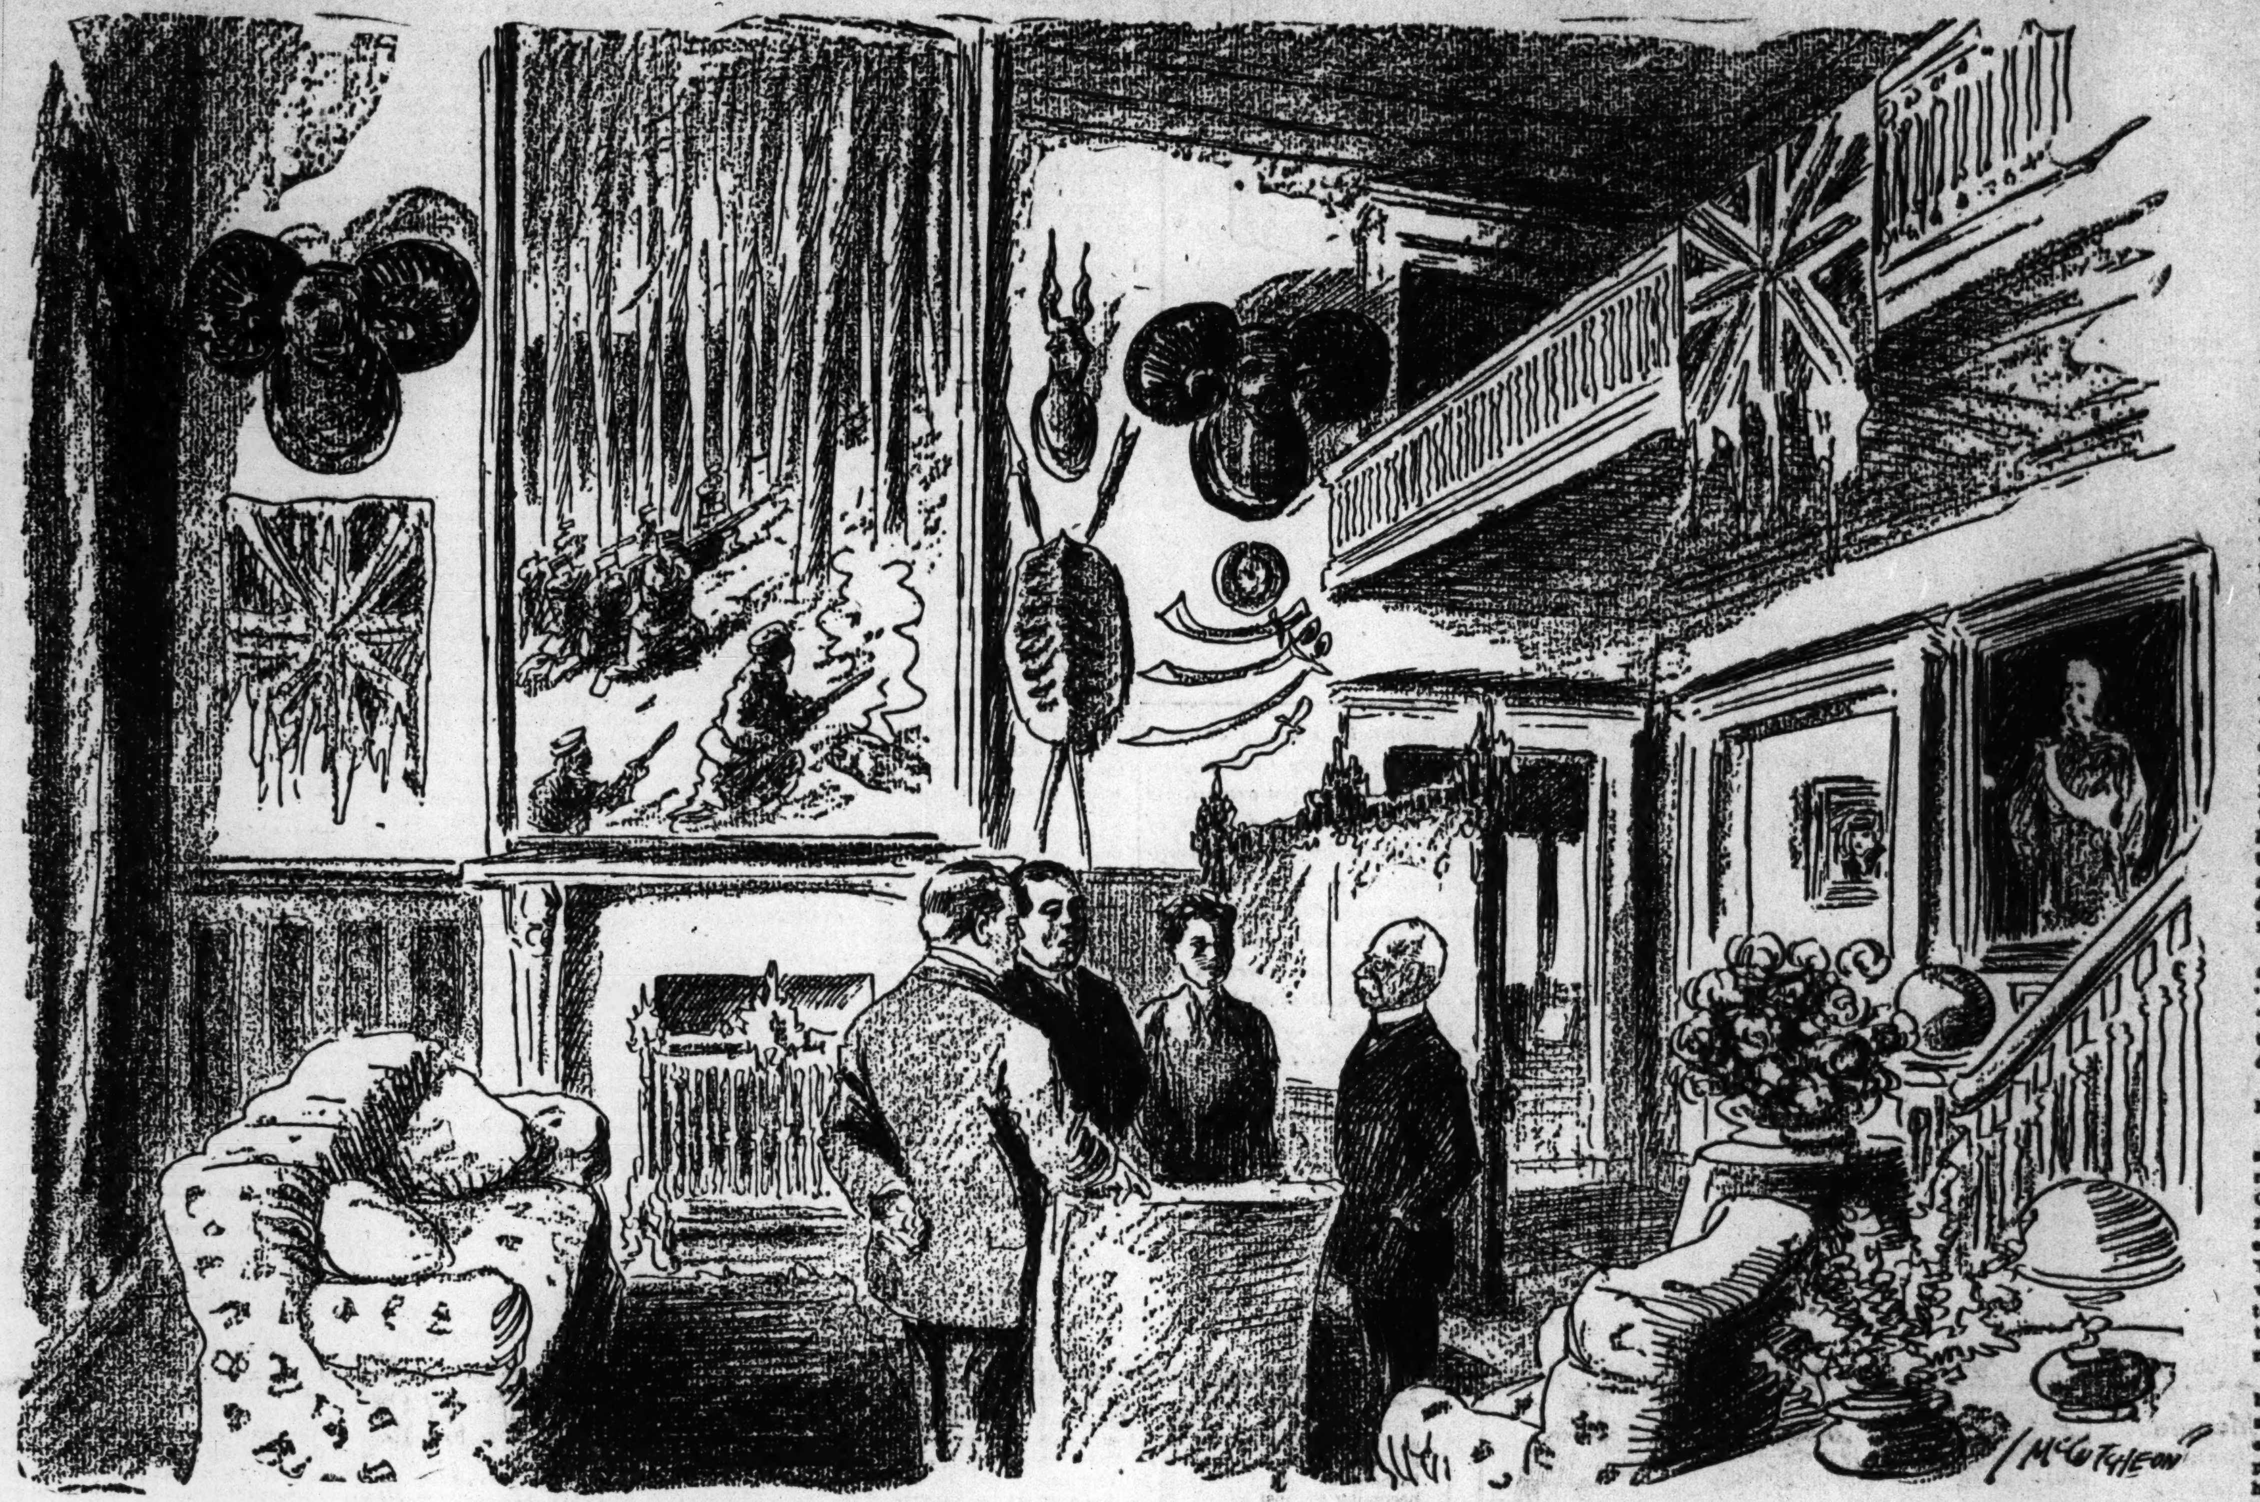
A LAST VISIT WITH "BOBS"

SKETCHES and STORY by JOHN T. McCUTCHEON

Another story about the great European war by Mr. McCutcheon, accompanied by McCutcheon pictures, will appear in next Sunday's "Tribune."

[Copyright: 1914: By John T. McCutcheon.]



The Reception Hall at Englemere, Lord Roberts' Country Place at Ascot.

A FEW days ago the headlines of an American paper announced that "England's Most Beloved Soldier Dies in France." Then followed a dispatch stating that Field Marshal Lord Roberts had succumbed to pneumonia after reviewing his Indian troops at the battle front.

To many of those who read the dispatch there must have come a common thought. If he had to die, if his time had come, how much more sentimentally fitting for him to end his long career of brilliant service to his empire by dying at the front, rather than by dying in the peaceful seclusion of his country home.

To me it seemed that he died where he would have liked to die, although he perhaps would have preferred death to come by a bullet than by pneumonia.

This valiant old soldier was undoubtedly the best liked man in the British empire, as well as the one toward whom Americans as a whole have had the friendliest feeling. I think most of the people of this country felt a greater sense of personal and kindly concern in the news of his death than could have been aroused by the death of any other person in England.

His age, his wonderfully long and active career, and the circumstances of his death near the battle front were features which appealed most strongly to the American imagination; and there is an affectionate familiarity in his nickname—"Bobs"—which strikes a favorable chord in the hearts of a democratic people such as we are.

As Field Marshal Roberts or as Earl Roberts we might not have liked him so much, but as "Bobs" he has long held a warm place in American sympathies.

To me the news of his death came as a shock, for I had been a guest at his country house only three weeks before and had left with the conviction that despite his 82 years he had many more years of life ahead of him. He was active, alert, keen minded, and evidently in excellent health. Each day he had worked energetically.

From the outbreak of the war he had been active in his efforts for the welfare of the soldiers. He took a great interest in the Indian troops, of which he was colonel in chief and to which he was attached because of his forty years of service in India, as well as because Cawnpore was his birthplace.

He also made requests for sportsmen to contribute saddles to the army, and called for public spirited citizens to loan field glasses to officers during the war. Thousands of saddles and glasses were sent in in response to this call, and to each sender he signed and sent a personal letter of thanks.

One of Lord Roberts' last speeches was at a review of a battalion of volunteers, when he referred sarcastically to young men who played football and cricket at this crisis.

Shortly before his death an English newspaper cynically commented on the fact that 20,000 people had attended a football match in an English city, while on the same day only twelve new recruits were secured in the same city.

In going to France at his advanced age it is not improbable that he wished to set an example in order to shame the young men who crowded the football fields instead of crowding the recruiting office. His death undoubtedly will stimulate recruiting.

A Roberts Memento.

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas small parties of raiders have recently been doing wanton damage to public property in the Orange River Colony and South African Republic by destroying railway bridges and culverts and cutting the telegraph wires, and whereas such damage cannot be done without the knowledge and connivance of the neighbouring inhabitants and the principal civil residents in the districts concerned.

Now therefore I, Frederick Sleigh, Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., V.C., Field Marshal, Commanding in Chief Her Majesty's Troops in South Africa, warn the said inhabitants and principal civil residents that, whenever public property is destroyed or injured in the manner specified above, they will be held responsible for aiding and abetting the offenders. The houses in the vicinity of the place where the damage is done will be burnt, and the principal civil residents will be made prisoners of war.

ROBERTS,
F. M.
Commanding in Chief, South Africa.

Army Head Quarters, South Africa.
Pretoria, 16th June, 1900.

PROCLAMATIE.

Aangezien in de laatste tijden kleine getallen van vrijbuiters in de Orange River Colony en de Zuid-Afrikaansche Republiek moedwillige schade hebben aangericht aan publiek eigendom door het vernielen van spoorwegbruggen, duikers en het afsnijden van de telegraafdraden en aangezien zulke schade niet veroorzaakt kan worden zonder medeweten van de omliggende bewoners en de voornaamste inwoners van de betrokken districten.

Zoo is het dat ik Frederick Sleigh, Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford K.P. G.C.B. G.C.S.I. G.C.I.E. V.C. Veldmaarschalk, Opperbevelhebber van Harer Majesteits troepen in Zuid-Afrika, gezegde inwoners waarschuw dat, waar publiek eigendom vernield of beschadigd wordt op de wijze zoals hierboven aangehaald, zij verantwoordelijk zullen gehouden worden voor het helpen en samenspannen met dusdanige vernielers.

ROBERTS,
F. M.
Opperbevelhebber in Zuid Afrika.

Hoofdkwartieren, Zuid Afrika,
Pretoria, 16 Juni 1900.

The London dispatches refer to him as the most popular military figure in Great Britain and a national hero without rival in the affections of his people. Yet for years the British people have disregarded his advice and warning.

He foresaw the German war cloud and appealed to his nation to prepare for it, but without effect. His words were regarded as the alarmist vagaries of an old man, and the nation answered his appeals with a complacent inaction which surely must have wounded his pride most deeply.

He preached compulsory military service which required the training of the whole male population in arms along the lines of Switzerland's plan, rather than upon the plan of continental military nations.

By speeches and addresses, by writings and by letters he preached preparedness, just as Col. Roosevelt is now urging this nation to adopt the Switzerland plan of compulsory military service, but his appeals were in vain. Great Britain could not be jolted out of its complacent faith in its great navy. Now it sees how wise and far seeing Lord Roberts had been.

It sees that a great navy, prepared up to the moment though it be, and massed in the North sea, is not enough. A great army must now be organised and developed to a state of military efficiency.

It must have been tremendously satisfying to Lord Roberts when he saw his campaign of the past five or six years so completely vindicated.

He lived long enough to see himself hailed by the whole empire as a wise prophet, and did not have to round out his long term of brilliant service embittered with the thought that he was considered a rambling old gentleman with delusions of impending danger.

On the 21st of October, while I was in London, I had a message from Lord Northcliffe's secretary asking if Mr. Cobb and I would not like to motor out with Lord Northcliffe on the following day and take luncheon with Lord Roberts at the latter's country seat, "Englemere," forty miles down in Surrey. We of course were delighted to accept the invitation.

At a few minutes before one the following afternoon Lord Northcliffe, Mr. Cobb, and I arrived at the door of Lord Roberts' place at Ascot.

We were shown into a great hall, richly furnished, the walls of which were adorned with wonderfully interesting souvenirs of the many campaigns in which the master of the house had figured. Above the big fireplace was a great painting that reached from the top of the mantel to the ceiling—twelve or fifteen feet, and it was characteristic that this painting, the most conspicuous thing in the house, should be a representation of a fierce battle wherein a detachment of courageous Gurkhas were fighting their way up a steep and wooded mountain side.

It is a wonderful painting, spirited in subject and brilliant in execution. And I can imagine the pleasure that Lord Roberts must have had in seeing each day his favorite Indian troops in action.

High on the wall, one at each side of the mantel, were the heads of an ovis poli and an ovis ammon—the big mountain sheep of Central Asia which sportsmen consider the greatest prizes in big game shooting.

Both heads were enormous, and I was told that the ovis ammon was a record head that had come from the Thian Shan mountains in northern Chinese Turkestan. The fact that I had traveled through those mountains, eight years ago, established a bond of interest which I hoped might help me in "getting acquainted."

Faded battle flags, game heads, clusters of strange weapons, and wonderful old Burmese wood carvings made the stately high ceilinged reception room a place of extraordinary interest. There were scores of queer swords and knives from Africa and India, odd helmets and bits of armor, spears, shields, guns, and carvings.

Upon every wall there were beautiful groupings of weapons, krises from the Malay states, jezails from the Afghan border, bullock hide shields from the Zulu country, wicked looking knives from Abyssinia, flags that had been taken in historic fights, paintings, and souvenirs that had been presented by nations and by individuals.

The great reception hall was a perfect setting for a soldier who had served his country for sixty years and who now was spending the twilight of his life in a peaceful quiet, surrounded by reminders of the thrilling days of his life.

On one wall was the striking portrait of Lord Roberts by Sargent, the one which has been reproduced so often. It is a brilliant painting, tremendously spirited, and represents the old soldier in the uniform of a field marshal, with many medals emblazoning the breast of his scarlet coat.

As we waited for a moment or two in the reception room I had an opportunity to study this fascinating array of things that adorned the walls. The arrangement had been done most skillfully, paintings and tapestries and flags so alternated with clusters of weapons that there was no "museum" effect. It was all in perfect taste, rich looking, and dignified.

While we were looking at the display a pleasant faced lady appeared, and we were introduced to Lady Aileen Roberts, the younger daughter of the field marshal.

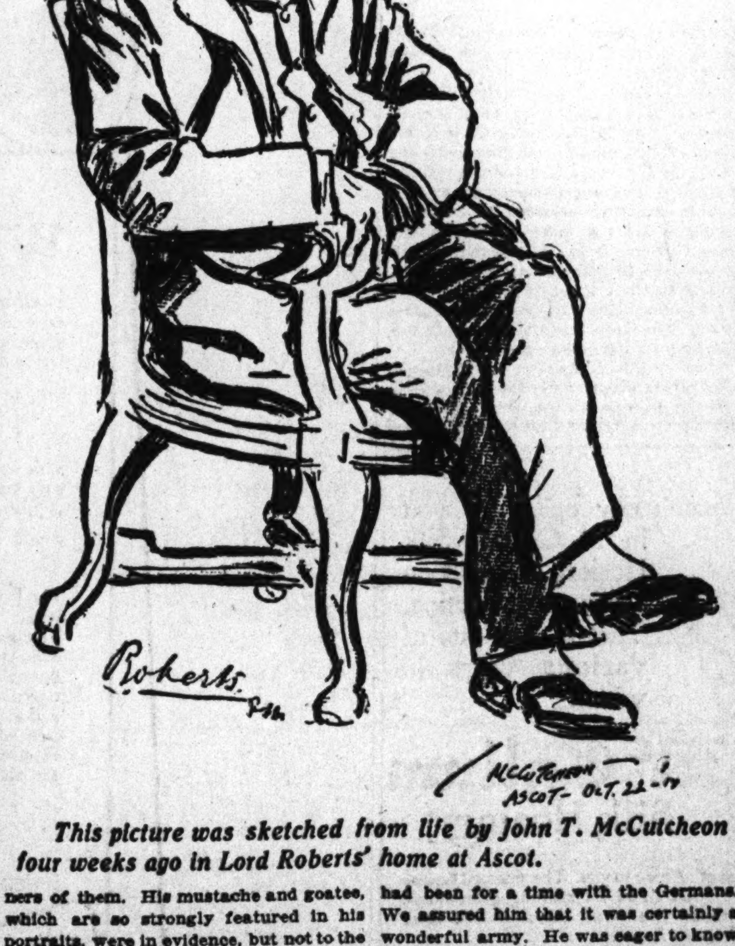
When Lord Northcliffe introduced us and said that we had just returned from the war zone, the conversation at once launched into war talk, and when it developed a moment or two later that we had been, for the greater part of our time, with the Germans, Lady Aileen's interest was keenly aroused in the experiences which we had undergone. We talked for a few minutes and then Lord Roberts entered. He was most affable and we were immediately made to feel "at home."

I had expected to see a larger man and certainly an older looking man. His face was rather ruddy and his hair was so thin on top that it gave one the impression of baldness.

There were deep lines under his bright and alert eyes and there were good natured wrinkles radiating from the corners of them. His mustache and goatee, which are so strongly featured in his portraits, were in evidence, but not to the degree that I had been led to expect. They seemed to fade, or rather blend, into the general ruddiness of his complexion.

THE LAST PICTURE OF LORD ROBERTS.



This picture was sketched from life by John T. McCutcheon four weeks ago in Lord Roberts' home at Ascot.

In height he was only 5 feet 3, and his suit, which was a trim brown sack suit, gave to his appearance little of a military effect. He wore a high standing collar, with a large dark bow tie, and his shoes were given a rather youthful and jaunty effect by the tan spats that he wore. His stature, his ruddiness and the rather youthful cut of his clothes suggested a man of 65 rather than one of 82.

His voice was clear and steady, and his interest when he heard that we had been over in the fighting zone was as keen as that of his daughter.

"They must have a great army," he said, when his daughter told him we had been for a time with the Germans. We assured him that it was certainly a wonderful army. He was eager to know the spirit of the German soldiers, and when we told him that the army, as we had seen it, seemed a unit in their enthusiasm and confidence, he nodded as though conscious that this must be the fact.

There were many things which we had observed while with the German army which we could not, with propriety, repeat to those on the other side, and in our relating the things which we had seen and done we confined ourselves to such matters as we already had written for our papers.

I was struck by the rather impersonal attitude which both Lord Northcliffe and Lord Roberts exhibited when the subject of the German army was under discussion.

They did not show the same bitterness of feeling which so often I have found even among the Americans. When we told them that in our observations the Germans had been operating with wonderful discipline and that the stories of German atrocities were undoubtedly terribly exaggerated, I was somewhat surprised to find that this was Lord Roberts' own opinion.

In the course of his long experience in many wars I am sure that he has become skeptical of many of the atrocity stories which flood the world during the progress of great wars. Lord Roberts asked how we had been treated while with the Germans and we told him briefly the circumstances of our trip to Belgium and how we had come to be caught in the German advance at Louvain, from which time we had continued with the Germans until we had been sent back from the French frontier to Aix-la-Chapelle.

At this juncture Lady Roberts came in on the arm of her elder daughter, Lady Edwina Stewart. Upon her arrival Lord Roberts at once went to her side and introduced us to her.

A moment or two later luncheon was announced and the party went into a great sunny, cheerful English dining room, where we sat down—a party of eight. Lord Roberts' grandson, a boy of about 18, had joined us. In a few days he was to get his commission as a second lieutenant and was soon to join the colors.

At the table were Lord and Lady Roberts, his only two living children—Lady Stewart and Lady Aileen Roberts, his grandson, and the three guests, Lord Northcliffe, Mr. Cobb, and myself.

The attitude of Lord Roberts toward his wife, who is suffering from the infirmities of age, was that of great deference and devotion. It was beautiful to see that his demeanor could not have been more attentive, considerate and affectionate if he had been a young man in the courting period instead of a man who had been married fifty-five years. I suggested to him that his family must be finding it difficult to keep him from going to the front and he smiled and said he was afraid he was too old to go. Instead of that he was sending his grandson.

On the walls of the dining room were a number of portraits and paintings, one or two of which attracted my particular attention. One was a picture of an incident in the South African war, wherein a number of Boers were shown to be defending a kopje. This painting was done by a Boer in South Africa. Another painting was that of his father, who was a general in India when Lord Roberts was born.

The service which these two men rendered to their country in a direct line extends over a century. There also was a beautifully executed painting of Lord Roberts, done by Laszlo, a London artist of Hungarian birth. Another painting was that of an Afghan, and still another that of an alert, bright faced, strong featured Gurkha soldier in the khaki uniform of the British army.

Lord Roberts spoke enthusiastically and affectionately of the Gurkhas, and when I told him that I had been through the Khyber pass as far as Landikotal he pointed to the Afghan's picture as the type of men that I must have seen in that great gateway between India and Afghanistan.

One of the most striking features of the dining room was an empty space wherein, until recently, a painting had been hanging. The two chains which had supported it still were in place, but the picture had been removed. It was a painting of Emperor William, which the latter had presented to his friend Lord Roberts, whom he considered the greatest living soldier. When war was declared the painting was taken down.

After luncheon Lord Roberts took us upstairs, where the walls with their wonderful adornments were as interesting as the walls in the great reception hall and the walls of the big stairway which led from the reception hall to a balconied gallery above.

One would like to have spent hours studying the marvelous collection of souvenirs which he had gathered together. The most striking displays were two mural decorations done on canvas by native Indian artists, representing famous Indian battles.

The two strips were about six feet high and thirty or forty feet long. Every man and every horse was shown in stiff, conventionalized attitude, the ones in the background being drawn the same size as those in the foreground. There were thousands of men and horses drawn out in amazing detail. In one of the hallways there were many framed newspaper placards such as are shown in the streets of London by news venders. These related to various historic news events during the South African war.

After we had explored the wonders of the house Lord Roberts was kind enough to consent to being sketched. He led the way into the library and for half an hour patiently posed while I made a pencil drawing. Lady Roberts came in and sat in a large easy chair while her husband faithfully and somewhat sleepily underwent the ordeal of being drawn. The others of the party spent this time walking about the lawn, upon which were a number of old Indian cannon faithfully guarding the premises.

They were souvenirs brought from battlefields of long ago and were curiously quaint and archaic compared with the field guns of today. Lord Roberts was kind enough to sign the drawing, whose only value, I fear, lies in the fact that it was probably the last drawing which had been made of him before he died.

Above the mantel in his library is a painting of his son, who was killed at the battle of Colenso on Dec. 15, 1899. He was his only son, and it is said that when the lists of the dead were posted Lord Roberts, who until then did not know that his son had been killed, went over to scan the names of the fallen.

Officers who watched him and who had dreaded to tell him that his son's name was on the list were fearful of the consequences when his eye should strike the name of his only son.

It is said that he read the list from top to bottom without any sign of emotion and then turned gravely and resumed his place at the table he had just left. Soon afterwards he was sent with Lord Kitchener to South Africa and by brilliant work ended the war and won an earldom. With the earldom went $500,000 and the title of Earl Roberts of Kandahar, Pretoria, and Waterford.

Thus in his title are the names of his two greatest military achievements, as well as the name of the Irish county from which his ancestors sprang. Just before we left Lord Roberts gave to Mr. Cobb a copy of a book which he considered most excellent. It was a collection of lectures by Prof. Cramb, collected under the title "Germany and England." Later when I read the book over I found that he had marked a number of passages. It may be interesting to reproduce these. On page 42 this passage was marked:

"What was the policy of Frederick I. and of Frederick the Great but just this? 'He is a fool,' said Frederick the Great, 'and that nation is a fool, who, having the power to strike the enemy unawares, does not strike and strike his deadliest.'"

Another marked quotation was as follows:

"Within the last few days, for instance, at a mere suggestion from Admiral Tirpitz as to the diminution of the German navy, the whole Liberal press rush forward like gudgeons to welcome even a shadow of a pretense of peace. Yet what really underlay the suggestion was the desire of the German government to have more power to put forward into their unprecedented demand for fifty-two millions to increase the German army.

"But, indeed, to no student of German history, above all to no student of Hohenzollern history, does this give the slightest surprise. Such Machiavellism in politics has been the mark of Prussian history from the moment that Prussia appeared as a first class power in Europe under the great elector, when it led to Prussia's great victory at Fehrbellen."

On page 55 this passage is marked:

"When, turning to England, I consider the apathy or the stolid indifference of the nation—when, for instance, I consider the deliberate and hostile silence or loud calumnies which for the last seven years have accompanied Lord Roberts' crusade, and when over against this apathy I survey in this month of February, 1913, the energy, the single devoted purposefulness throbbing everywhere throughout Germany, her forward ranging efforts, her inner life, her army, her fleet, I seem to hear again the thunder of the footsteps of a great host. It is the war bands of Alaric."

On page 48 Lord Roberts had marked this passage: "And to listen without smiling when the great Spanish legist Alberdi declares that the soldier is no higher than the executioner, though one would have imagined that the difference between a hangman on the scaffold pinioning his victim before destroying him, and the warrior on the battlefield periling his life, would have been apparent even to a Spanish doctrinaire."

On page 64 this passage is marked: "There is, for instance, the annual appearance in Germany of very nearly 700 books dealing with war as a science. This points at once to an extreme preoccupation in that nation with the idea of war."

On page 66: "Yet is there time, O Athenians, yet is there time! Cease to hire your armies; cease to fill your ranks with the offscourings of a planet. Go yourselves and stand in the ranks, and then, dying, you shall die greatly and with a glory that shall surpass the glories of the past, or, victorious, you shall gain a victory that shall exceed all your victories in the past!"

On page 89: "This is Treitschke's governing idea—the greatness of Prussia, the glory of an army which is a nation and of a nation which is an army."

These quotations marked by Lord Roberts are interesting as showing the things which impressed him most deeply.

When we left Englemere we were taken by Lady Aileen to the Ascot racecourse, where in the betting inclosure below the grandstand a most complete soldiers' hospital had been installed.

The nurses were recruited from the young women of the neighborhood, and I thought as I looked at the care and attention which the wounded soldiers were receiving how different their condition now was from their life in the trenches. They had dry beds, plenty of food, and comfort.

If war may be said to have one bright spot it lies in the self-sacrificing devotion of the women who give their efforts, time, and thoughts to the relief of the suffering of men who come back from the battlefields.

It may be interesting in connection with Lord Roberts and his campaign in the Transvaal to note the methods which he adopted against civilian attacks in South Africa. While I was in the Transvaal during the Boer war I found one of the proclamations of warning which he had issued. The reproduction of this document, I think, may be of interest just now when similar measures are being taken in the European war.

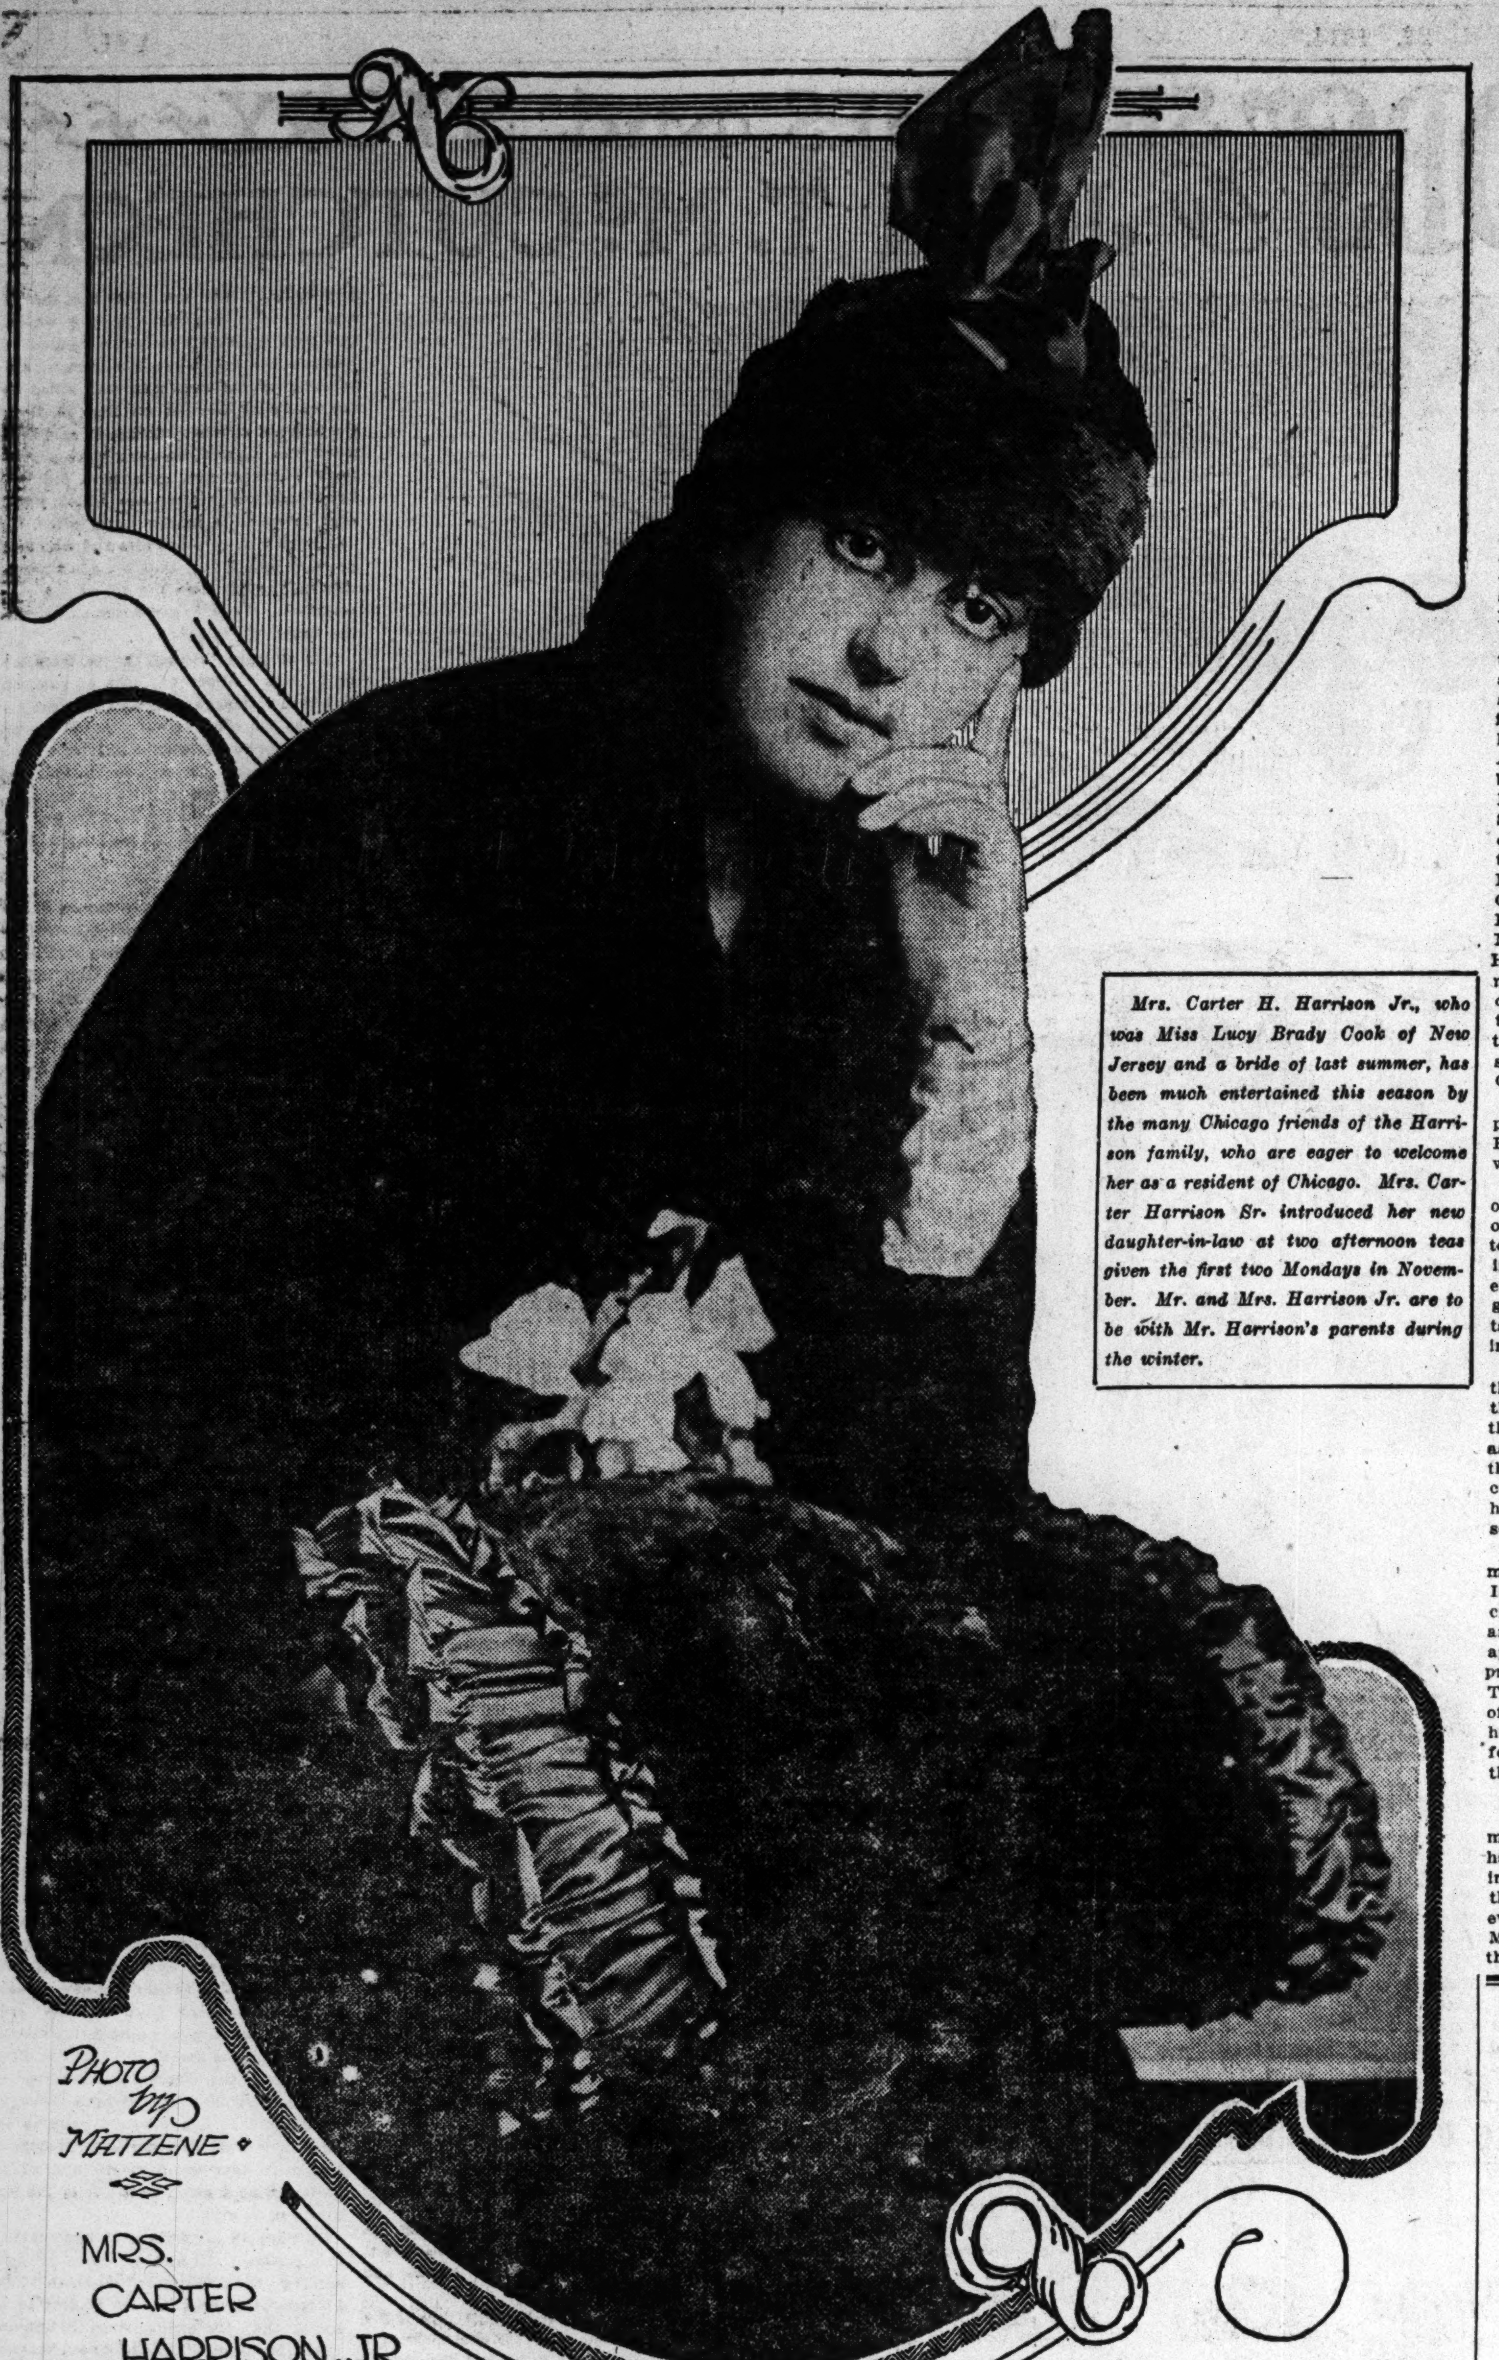
Thanksgiving—Greatest of U.S. Holidays.



MRS. CARTER HARRISON, JR.

Mrs. Carter H. Harrison Jr., who was Miss Lucy Brady Cook of New Jersey and a bride of last summer, has been much entertained this season by the many Chicago friends of the Harrison family, who are eager to welcome her as a resident of Chicago. Mrs. Carter Harrison Sr. introduced her new daughter-in-law at two afternoon teas given the first two Mondays in November. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Jr. are to be with Mr. Harrison's parents during the winter.

By Mme. X.

WE have four peculiarly national holidays — Thanksgiving day, Fourth of July, Washington's birthday, and Lincoln's birthday—and the first mentioned is the oldest of the quartet.

It is especially a New England festival, as it celebrates the relief of the starving colony at Plymouth, Mass., about the year 1623. But, though it was originally observed only in Massachusetts colony and there mainly with prayer and hymn singing in pious Puritan fashion, it is now a nationwide celebration, with turkey, cranberry sauce, and mince pie as the chief ritual.

This year there will be, however, a deeper note in our thanksgiving. Never before has our great young democracy stood out in such strong contrast to the world's great old autocracies. Never before has American citizenship seemed so desirable, so precious a heritage.

Let us give thanks!

We stand at this moment on the threshold of the winter's social season. It is not out of place to take stock of the modes, fashions, amusements, and preoccupations of the present time, note the changes from preceding years. The great French dressmakers and designers had already given the general form and tone to fashions in dress before they and their workmen were called to arms to defend France.

The full skirt has returned to favor. The basque—unknown since the early '80s—is reappearing. Sleeves are tight and long, the kimono sleeve is passing from the scene. Coats are of the redingote order, full skirted and high collared. Hats are as a rule small and tight to the head, though there are many smart broad brimmed ones. Evening gowns are generally quite sleeveless. Tulle, filmy, floating, and frail, in lightest shades, is much à la mode for younger women. Coiffures are inclined to be rather high and close to the head. Ears are reappearing after several years of eclipse.

The seriousness with which the war is regarded is manifested by the absence of anything military in the fashions. It is not chic to reflect in any way in frivolous attire this terrible conflict. A Gotham dressmaker who advertised "fashions designed in the trenches; fascinating martial effects," struck a false, discordant note. The trenches are otherwise occupied just now.

The background for these modes of 1914 are houses of an amazing and severe simplicity—that is, if you are able to shed your past utterly and to make your surroundings quite up to date. Plain walls—panelled preferably—little furniture and that of so choice a kind as to be called "meubles" rather than furniture—a few, very few, but quite exquisite ornaments; no silver in the dining room, only rare pieces of old Chinese porcelain and pottery; bedrooms with pale walls, French chintzes, glass topped dressing tables, painted furniture, and pastel hued rugs—there is your house or apartment of today if you have the strength of mind to eliminate all record of preceding years and modes in home adornment.

It is a movement in the right direction. "Eliminate!" is the cry. Don't permit yourself to be the victim of things. A few clothes and those of the best and latest modes! A few ornaments with a similar provision as to their choice quality! Thus equipped the society woman of today can embark on the winter's round of give and take in gayeties with a serene mind.

The latest flower, the winter's fashionable rose, must not be overlooked. Two years ago the florists evolved the Mrs. Aaron Ward rose, an exquisite and fragrant creation of salmon pink. Last year appeared the Prince of Bulgaria, akin to the above except that it had a curious sharp point in its petals.

This year a quite different rose calls for attention, the Russell rose. It comes from Providence, R. I., and is a seedling discovered by an inconspicuous florist, who introduced it to some important New York florists. They developed it and named it after a New York society woman, Mrs. Charles Russell.

The color is an intense purplish deep pink, the shape a refined edition of that of the American Beauty; the fragrance is rich and sweet; the whole effect is sumptuous and striking rather than delicate and reticent like the Mrs. Aaron Ward rose. But the Russell rose is the latest achievement in fashionable horticulture.

The first ball of the season will be that to be given next Friday evening at the Blackstone hotel by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Van Doren Shaw to introduce their attractive debutante daughter, Miss Evelyn Wells Shaw.

There are not so many balls this year as heretofore looming up on the social horizon. The list of debutantes is rather smaller than usual, and this, with the generally felt sympathy for the tragedy of Europe, and apprehension as to business in America, combine to make the giving of balls a more difficult matter than it ordinarily is. All the more gratitude is due to those who do give them. The news that the two Assembly balls are to take place as of yore is welcomed by all. The Bachelors and Benedicts, too, will dance as they do once a year.

That excellent charity, the Lying In hospital, is again to the fore this winter, offering us one of the chief entertainments of the season. "The benefit gala performance" is a means to raise part of the fund necessary for the maintenance of this institution. This enterprise has been substituted for the Russian ball proposed last spring as this year's show for the hospital.

This gala evening will be held at the Auditorium on Friday, Dec. 18, when Mme. Anna Pavlowa and her entire ballet will give a new program of dances. The Century Opera company of New York will also give an all star production of "I Pagliacci."

So successful has been the sale of boxes that the committee in charge has had to add a whole row of additional boxes by converting the front two rows of the dress circle into loges seating six each. These will be divided off by gay partitions.

As this will probably be the one opportunity for society, in its largest, most comprehensive sense, to turn out en masse to see and be seen for "sweet charity's sake," it will undoubtedly be a crowded and brilliant occasion. The absence of the Chicago opera should conduce to great condensing of splendor in attire and general effect on this 18th of December.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, the manager of the affair, is the embodiment of energy and efficiency, and has working with her some of the most representative women in Chicago. The sale of the boxes is in the hands of a committee consisting of Mrs. Alfred Hamill, Mrs. Joseph Winterbotham, Mrs. Robert Lamont, and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, with Mrs. Edward Swift as chairman. Among the box holders are Mrs. Marshall Field, who has taken two boxes, Mrs. Watson Blair, Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. Robert McGann, Mrs. James B. Walker, Mrs. Potter Palmer Jr., Mrs. John Borden, Mrs. C. M. Ely, Mrs. George Isham, Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick, and Mrs. J. Ogden Armour.. In short, the list of boxholders is one of the most formidable social directories—a gathering in small compass of the socially prominent—that was ever presented by an entertainment for charity in Chicago.

Mrs. Morris Johnston is head of the press committee, while Mrs. E. Harris Brewer is managing the programs, which will be sold by a bevy of young girls.

The buffet in the foyer will be a feature of the entertainment. It is to be in charge of Mrs. John A. Carpenter, who is sure to give it some quite new and chic touches in the way of decoration and ideas of every kind. It is rather odd that our grand opera has never had a buffet attached to it, as has the Metropolitan opera in New York or the Paris grand opera.

As far as possible regular patrons of the Chicago grand opera will have for this entertainment the same boxes that they usually occupy for the opera. But as most boxes are shared by four owners, this has presented a problem to the box committee which it has solved by the honorable maxim, "first come first served."

The work of the dispensary, one of the most important departments of the Lying-In hospital, has been enormously increased this year owing to hard times among the laboring classes. So many apply there nowadays who in a more prosperous era are able to pay for care. The same condition has doubled the task of the social service committee. The hard times work up as well as down, unfortunately, and the regular revenues of the hospital are sadly reduced.

Mrs. Joseph Coleman and the other moving spirits of the Casino are toiling hard to get it ready for its promised opening on Dec. 5. It is going to be one of the smartest, most up to date enterprises ever undertaken by Chicago fashionables. Mrs. John Carpenter is superintending the interior decoration, which is to be of the directoire period—that curious, subtle, illusive era that intervened between the downfall of Louis XVI. and the rise of Napoleon.

It is harder to identify the furniture of that epoch than the costumes. Every one remembers the high stocks, exaggerated collars, long lank hair, banged across the forehead, the tight long trousers and ruffled shirts of the men and the big poke bonnets, short waisted, fragile gowns of the women. Also the long canes both men and women sported. But of their houses we know less. It was, however, an era of great simplicity in furnishing. The gayety and luxury of the Louises had been banished and the Roman classicism of Napoleon's time had not come in.

The Casino will probably be the scene of some of the gayest affairs of the winter. Mrs. Coleman and her able cabinet are planning a real old fashioned Christmas party on Christmas eve, with a tree and Santa Claus as chief features of the occasion. Each member will be requested to bring one gift of frivolous, fun making character, and each one present will receive a gift. Eames MacVeagh and Howard Gillette are in charge of Santa and the tree, and as the party does not begin until 10 o'clock or later, it will not interfere with any home celebrations. It promises to be a hilarious occasion.

Of course, there are few social occasions—luncheons, teas, or dinners—where war or some of its phases is not the main topic, and women are developing a distinct opinion on the subject of the proper course for this country to pursue in the matter of preparation for defense of the country and of such treaties for which, as signatories, we are responsible. As women are coming more and more to the fore in America—is it in fourteen states now that women have full or partial suffrage?—their views on this subject are of growing importance.

Tomorrow afternoon, at the residence of Mrs. Joseph Bowen, Frau Rosika Schwimmer of Hungary will address the members of the Chicago Equal Suffrage association on "Women and War." She is said to be one of the most brilliant and interesting speakers of the day. She made a great sensation at the recent convention at Nashville of the National Woman Suffrage association. So what she has to say will have much weight.

Before deciding on the pacifist side of the question, however, every thinking woman—and man, too, for that matter—should read Homer Lea's "The Valor of Ignorance."

"It gives to think."

Today is certainly the day of organization, coördination, of working together in bands. And this in spite of the individualism imputed to us as a people. The latest evidence of this is the formation of the Parents' league. In olden times if a pair of parents thought a certain course of action was desirable for their offspring they put it into execution, irrespective of the course pursued by the parents of Johnny Jones and his sister Sue next door. This often produced much agony and heart burning on the part of the youngsters who were not Johnny Jones and his sister Sue.

Parents having seemingly of late years grown more tender hearted than those stoics who fathered and mothered us of an earlier generation, this process of making a difference in the uprearing of children is to be obviated by a concerted action on the part of all the parents of this league so that each child when he goes to bed at a certain hour or performs some of the home duties required of the young knows that Johnny Jones and his sister Sue next door are doing exactly the same thing at the same hour. It is a process of standardizing the uprearing of the young. The movement was started in New York some years ago, when one of the most famous restaurateurs there went to the leading society women of that city and said: "You don't know what your young people are doing these days, what hours or company they keep." The revelations he made to them alarmed and astonished the New York matrons, who thereupon formed a league to control the youth they were rearing.

The movement spread to Boston and Buffalo. In the latter place it is called the Simplicity league.

The women most directly interested in organizing this Chicago league are Mmes. George Isham, Cyrus H. McCormick, Watson Blair, Robert McGann, Potter Palmer Jr., Stanley Field, Cyrus Bentley, George A. Carpenter, John Borden, Joseph Medill Patterson, A. A. Carpenter, Arthur L. Farwell, Charles G. King, Arthur Meeker, James Keeley, H. H. Porter Jr., and Norman Williams.

A large luncheon at Mrs. George Isham's a fortnight ago was the occasion of the birth of this league, which will be made into a real working organization at a meeting on Dec. 7 at Mrs. Isham's, which 200 representative women will be asked to attend.

The idea of the association is to promote "simplicity and common sense in matters relating to the social life of children and in all subjects affecting their welfare." The organizers further announce that "membership is eligible to all parents and guardians living in Chicago and its suburbs who are interested in the aims of the league and are ready to pledge their support to its bylaws and recommendations."

The idea must appeal to all thoughtful parents.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY

Buds Defer to Brides and Benefits.

MISS MARGERY COLTON

MISS ADELINE PENDLETON

The engagement is announced of Miss Margery Colton and Randall Hagner, both of Washington. Miss Colton is the daughter of the late Col. Francis Colton and a sister of Col. George R. Colton of the army and sister-in-law of Commander Archibald Davis of the navy. Much of her life has been spent in the orient and other faraway posts where members of the family have been stationed at various times.

Miss Adeline Pendleton is one of the army group of debutantes. She is a daughter of Col. and Mrs. E. P. Pendleton.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Corespondence.]—One of the interesting announcements made in Washington society for some time is that of the engagement of Margery Colton and Randall Hagner. Both of them are so thoroughly identified with Washington and have such a wide circle of friends here that congratulations are simply being showered on them.

Miss Colton is the daughter of the late Col. Francis Colton, and though she has lived a good deal abroad and in the orient, it has been mostly because her father, or her brother, or whichever member of her family she happened to be living with, was stationed in some far away post. The Coltons are all army people, and between whiles Margery has always come "home" to Washington.

Mostly she has made her home with her brother, Col. George R. Colton, U. S. A., and as he was stationed in Manila for several years, and was governor of Porto Rico for a while, Margery, who was chatelaine of his establishment at both these posts, has moved around considerably. Lately she has been living with her brother-in-law and sister, Commander and Mrs. Archibald Davis (the navy this time, instead of the army) and it is they who make the announcement of the engagement. But whoever she's living with, every one in Washington knows Margery Colton.

Equally every one in Washington knows Randall Hagner. The Hagners are of the old established Washington families—"the cave dwellers," as they are locally designated. They have been established hereabouts for several generations. "Old Dr. Hagner," Randall's father, was one of the best known physicians in Washington in his day; and young Dr. Hagner—"Dr. Frank"—promises to be equally well known long before he reaches his father's age.

His sister is Miss Isabella Hagner, who was the first regularly accredited social secretary of the White House, organizing the work of that position under Mrs. Roosevelt, and returning after four years' interregnum to serve Mrs. Wilson in the same capacity.

No date has been set for the wedding, but it is announced that it will take place during the winter, and it is simply bound to be a big affair.

Equally interesting so far as the girl is concerned, though the man is practically unknown to Washington, is the announcement of the engagement of Miss Gladys Ingalls, daughter of the late Melville E. and Mrs. Ingalls of Washington, and Frederic Murphy of New York. The engagement, it is said, has existed since last spring, and would have been announced sooner but for the illness and death of Mr. Ingalls.

Miss Ingalls is one of the most all around interested and interesting girls in Washington society. She has traveled a lot and has been entertained in most of the big cities both in America and abroad. Her father, whom she greatly resembles, was a railroad man, president of the Big Four.

Poor little buds! Between the brides and the benefits they don't seem to stand much show. They are getting pushed further and further into the future, and it seems almost impossible to get them to stand up and be counted. There are fully a score who answer the roll call, but comparatively few of them are ready to definitely announce their plans. Most of them expect to be presented "some time in December," and that is about as close as they will come to putting themselves on record.

There is a whole group of army and navy buds ready for the social bouquet. Probably the first to formally come out will be Miss Elizabeth Wiley, daughter of Commander and Mrs. H. A. Wiley, whose parents have discarded the old fashioned afternoon reception for a tea dance to be given for her next Tuesday. Miss Ruth Wilson, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Henry Wilson, is also to be presented at a tea dance, followed by a dinner and then more dancing, which will be given at Rauscher's for her on Dec. 5. Miss Wilson is a blonde girl, handsome and musical, and is likely to make a good deal of a hit.

Five days later she will be joined by Miss Adeline Pendleton, daughter of Col. and Mrs. E. P. Pendleton, who has selected Dec. 10 as the date of her debut. Miss Pendleton's family has quite a few Chicago connections and it is probable that she will make some Chicago visits before the season is over.

ETIQUETTE

By ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER.

"DEAR MISS VAN RENSSELAER: Would you be kind enough to tell me through THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE whether it is proper or not to send a wedding present to bride and groom when invited to the church ceremonies only and knowing the bride slightly and having been a good friend of the groom? I am under the impression that flowers could be sent to the bride. Should anything be sent to the groom? What kind of flowers would you suggest? What would be proper to send the groom? What would you write on cards when sending presents?

"C. E. G."

It is not necessary to send a present when you are invited only to the church.

DORA: It is easier to advise you what not to say than to give you a general idea of certain expressions used in "cultured society." In the first place, that expression is a little provincial. It is better to say that people have read widely, or that they are students, or that they have a cultivated taste in some direction, than to say that they are "cultured." Such terms as "clubman," "gentleman friend," and "course dinner" are provincialisms. So are "thank you kindly," "pardon me," and "dear friend" or "dear Charlie," when used at the beginning of a letter. "I laid down" is a mistake made by many persons who know better, but who have fallen into a slovenly habit of speaking. I may prepare a list of some more expressions to be avoided in a future letter.

"Dear Miss Van Rensselaer: I am to be married this month and would be grateful if you would answer the following questions: 1. How should the wedding procession be formed? I am to have a ringbearer, two flower girls, maid of honor, and four bridesmaids; also four ushers. The aisles of the church are diagonal, thus meeting at the altar. 2. Who furnishes the machines for the bride's and groom's families? 3. Is it necessary to send after the ushers, and how long should they be at the church before the ceremony? 4. Do the maids and ushers ride in couples, or one machine for the maids and one for the ushers? 5. Does the bridal party all start from the bride's home at one time so as to arrive at church at the same time? Also, who do the bride and groom ride with?

NOVEMBER BRIDE."

1. The ushers come first in couples. The bridesmaids follow. I do not understand the duties of a ringbearer, but imagine she should walk with the maid of honor. Last come the flower girls, then the bride with her father. 2. They furnish their own machines. 3. The ushers may be sent for, or they may find their own way to the church about a quarter of an hour before the doors are opened. 4. You can send for the bridesmaids unless they have machines of their own, in which case they will probably suggest using them. 5. Yes, the bride drives with her father and the groom with his best man.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elisabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write on one side of the page only.

PHOTO DAGUERRE

Among the women interested in the cotton cotillon of Our Own City Poor club are Mrs. Ethelwynne Green, who is chairman of the favors at the cotillon, and Mrs. E. T. H. Schmidt, one of the patronesses. The cotillon will be given Saturday evening at the Hotel La Salle, and the money will be used to buy Christmas dinners for poor people of Chicago.

By Inez Travers.

THE Frances Juvenile home is the only institution of its kind in the world and one that might well be reproduced in numbers. It was founded about five years ago with the sum of $450. For a long time it seemed as if the good work was to be nothing more than a deserving experiment, and even yet there are times when the bills pile up and the lack o fa regular maintenance fund is keenly felt. But somehow the work goes on and the fourteen children who happen to be at the home are not turned out until everything that can be done for them is done.

The home is for the purpose of giving medical treatment to children who are victims of hereditary taint. There are more than 500 of such cases in Chicago annually, and no institution except the Frances Juvenile home where they can be taken care of in the proper environment.

If they are sent to the hospitals they are obliged to be in objectionable wards or among children who are confined to their beds. They are, of course, not allowed to attend the public schools because of the danger of infection. A large percentage of these cases are curable, and it is their cure under the best environment that the home aims to accomplish.

The incurables, therefore, are not received, as the house will only accommodate fourteen children at a time, and as soon as one is cured another comes to take its place. Sometimes the children are in the home a year and consequently need moral training as well as physical care.

A school teacher has been provided by the board of education to teach one day at the home. It is remarkable how quickly these children respond to her teaching. Many of them have never been to school in their lives and cannot even write their names, but before they have been in school long they have caught up with normal children of their age. One little girl was brought in to the home who because she had never spoken in her life was believed to be dumb, but with kindness and utiring effort she was taught to speak and to read.

The home is a comfortable brick house at 3929 Indiana avenue, for which $45 a month is paid in rent. It has a pleasant living room and dining room on the main floor and sleeping rooms above where two or three children sleep in a room in tiny white beds. On the next floor is the sunny schoolroom, to which has lately been given a grand piano. There is a pleasant yard where the children play games, and over the whole place is the shine of absolute cleanliness. When the children are in the yard and around the house they have much the comfortable look of a well situated, if unusually large family.

Dr. Clara Seippel gives her services free, visiting the children once and sometimes twice a day. When she is indisposed Dr. Sadie Adair takes her place. There is a housekeeper who attends to the culinary wants of the children and keeps the house in perfect order and a trained nurse who cares for them and is Dr. Seippel's able second.

The expense of the home amount to about $225 a month, including food and fuel. As there is no maintenance fund, it is sometimes difficult to raise this amount and the president of the board has hit upon the plan of giving pound parties on the third Friday of each month to stock the pantry with staples. All the friends of the home are invited on that day to come and take tea in the schoolroom and hear the children sing.

The officers of the home are: Mrs. Philip E. Holp, president; Dr. Clara Seippel, first vice president; Mrs. Robert J. Dodds, second vice president; Mrs. J. J. Stream, third vice president; Mrs. G. W. Hegel, recording secretary; Mrs. J. C. Hornung, corresponding secretary; W. R. Dawes, treasurer; Miss Erlenborn, assistant treasurer.

The funds are low and there are many poor, unfortunate, and even destitute patients discharged from hospitals every day without money, without health, and without friends to help them get a new start in life. These must be taken care of. They need attention, nourishing food, medicine, and a helping hand. The society is doing its utmost to help these unfortunates, but needs the assistance of every one in the undertaking. For the last six years the society has been working along these lines. BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Are a Harmless Substitute.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat the liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets.

These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids.

It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place. Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "logy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

A New Story

By Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman

Starts in Next Sunday's Tribune

You readers of The Chicago Tribune—you who appreciate high-class modern fiction—to you the Tribune announces the coming of another great serial story by Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman, two of America's foremost authors. The collaboration of these two noted writers has resulted in a sensational story—ZUDORA.

Zudora is a beautiful American girl of eighteen—heir to a fortune of twenty millions. She is endowed with unusual powers of hypnotism and scientific deduction. Through these powers she develops into a keen detective. Her queer guardian assigns to her the unraveling of twenty baffling mysteries—the solution of which will determine whether or not she shall secure her fortune and marry the man of her choice. From this brief synopsis you may judge that Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman have prepared for you a fascinating, new story—different from anything that has ever appeared—a story full of thrills and dramatic climaxes.

The story of Zudora will be presented in 20 episodes. One complete episode will appear each week in the Chicago Sunday Tribune beginning next Sunday, November 29th. The 22nd episode of Harold MacGrath's story—The Million Dollar Mystery—appears in this issue of The Tribune. Zudora begins in The Tribune next Sunday. The better motion picture theaters everywhere will present to you Thanhouser's motion picture version of this great work simultaneously with the appearance of the story. The first episode of this story in photoplay form will appear at the Theaters starting tomorrow, Monday, November 23rd. Because of this co-operative arrangement between the Chicago Tribune and the Thanhouser Film Corporation you are offered an exceptional opportunity to read the story and to see it enacted in motion pictures.

Don't miss next Sunday's Tribune. Order it early—it will be the biggest nickel's worth you ever got. Remember, the story of Zudora, by Harold MacGrath and Daniel Carson Goodman starts in next Sunday's Tribune.

NEWS of the RELIGIOUS WORLD

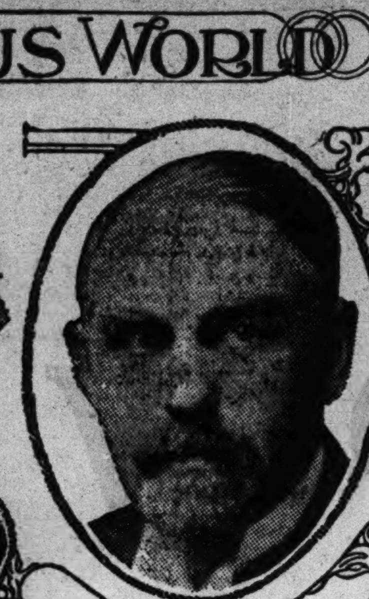
By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

TWO Congregational churches, one suburban and the other a city church, are worthy of special recognition for deeds accomplished.

The surban church is the First Congregational church of Oak Park, of which the Rev. William E. Barton is pastor, and the city church is the Warren Avenue Congregational church, of which the Rev. James Alexander Jenkins is pastor.

The Oak Park church has succeeded in overcoming the difficulties of securing a large attendance at the evening preaching service, the despair of suburban churches wherever found. Until the new experiment the churches of all of the denominations in central Oak Park held only vesper services. The First Congregational church reported an attendance at the vesper service held in its church of from 75 to 150. A few weeks ago a committee of men was formed with Fred L. Rossback as chairman, and their activity in advertising has been one of the essential factors in the success which followed.

The Rev. J. A. JENKINS



The Rev. WILLIAM E. BARTON

At no service since the evening meeting began has there been less than 750 in attendance, and on at least one occasion the attendance reached 1,100, the capacity of the church, while it was estimated that 200 were turned away for lack of room.

Dr. Barton, the pastor, has been the preacher at each service, and his sermon subjects have been presentations of the gospel on simple, practical themes. His subject this evening is "The Man Who Kept a Good Story."

A drawing feature has been the singing of specially secured soloists. Tonight Francis Ingraham of the Chicago Grand Opera company will sing, and next Sunday evening Helen Stanley of the New York Grand Opera company will be the soloist. Familiar gospel hymns are used for the congregational singing.

Because of repeated requests the choir will sing this evening a hymn entitled "A Hymn for Men," written by Dr. Barton four years ago. This hymn at the time it was written created a sensation because it was the means of bringing contributions of hymns deemed suitable for men from a large number of contributors, including Dr. Mary Walker and Ald. John Coughlin.

The change from the vesper to the evening service followed the reopening of the church after $100,000 had been spent on the improvement and enlargement of the church building and the erection of a parish house.

The First Congregational church celebrated its fiftieth anniversary and the fifteenth year of the pastorate of Dr. Barton nearly a year ago.

One of the activities which all of the churches of Oak Park are supporting, which has headquarters in the First Congregational church, is the community training school for religious work. The school has an enrollment of 650, a faculty of several members representing different denominations, and conducts a course of study which will continue until Easter or thereabouts.

The Warren Avenue Congregational church, located on Warren and North Albany avenue, will celebrate today and next Sunday with intervening services the twenty-fifth anniversary of its organization. The speakers at 10:30 are the Rev. W. A. Ellis and the Rev. R. W. Gammon, and at 7:45 the Rev. H. H. Walker and the Rev. W. T. McElveen.

Next Sunday the pastor of the church, Dr. Jenkins, will deliver the anniversary sermon in the morning, and the Rev. Frank G. Smith, former pastor, will preach in the evening.

The Warren Avenue church was organized into an independent church in 1889, but it had its beginnings in 1877 in a Sunday school conducted in a residence at 784 Walnut street. In 1880 the congregation was organized into the Central Park branch of the First Congregational church, Chicago, of which the Rev. E. P. Goodwin was pastor. The name was changed to the Warren Avenue branch in 1885, and in 1889 it became an independent church. The regular pastors during the twenty-five years have been the Rev. J. A. Adams, the Rev. J. W. Fifield, Dr. Smith, and Dr. Jenkins.

Faith Congregational church, North Sawyer avenue, near West Ohio street, is a branch of the Warren Avenue church. Its pastor, the Rev. W. A. Ellis, will preach the morning sermon today.

Some of the features indicating improvement in the church organization during the last year are the following:

The building has been renovated and improved.

The church has adopted a new constitution, establishing a church council composed of the boards and heads of departments, created the office of register, having charge of statistics of church membership, and organized a board of deaconesses for parish visitation and other service.

The women's home and foreign missionary societies and the Woman's Aid society have been combined into a single woman's association.

The Sunday school has been completely graded, a young men's Bible class of eighty established, "get together" socials have been conducted for young people, and a parish secretary for correspondence and stenographic work employed.

Say Women Will "Come Back" at City Election.

MRS. MARY MILLS

Mrs. Mary Mills, president of the newly formed Illinois Progressive Woman's league, will attempt with the aid of the other members of the organization to organize a woman's Progressive club in every ward of Chicago before the primary election in February.

By Marion Walters Lovett.

"CHICAGO women will 'come back' at the mayoralty election in the spring," is the prediction of the leaders in the women's political organizations and nonpartisan civic league. The slump in the woman's vote on Nov. 3 cannot be taken as an indication of a lack of interest on the part of the women, it is claimed. Political inertia, a malady which has attacked so many thousands of the male voters, will not fasten itself upon the women. This will be proven at the next election, say the women who are sizing up the situation.

The fact that the women understand the duties of the mayor and the aldermen of the city is given as one of the first reasons why the women will renew their interest in affairs political. Every woman readily comprehends that the aldermen handle the municipal housekeeping, and that, unless she helps to elect the best type of city father, the alley back of her own home is likely to suffer in consequence.

That the women will be able to vote for all officials and on all public questions has been given as another reason for the looked for revival of political interest. Many women acknowledged that they did not go to the polls at all on the third of the month because they were not entitled to vote for United States senator, Illinois representatives, and other important officials. They rather scorned half a ballot.

While all workers realize that there will be elements in the spring election at which a mayor and thirty-seven aldermen will be elected, which will stir the women into political action, they are not leaving the matter to "natural causes." Already each organization has set to work at the painstaking, drudging work of organization—the close organization that has been proven to be the only sure means of a large woman's vote.

Mrs. William Severin, president of the Illinois Republican Woman's association, holds the opinion that women will go to the polls in far greater numbers when they are not required by law to give their age.

"There is no doubt that the age proposition keeps many women from voting," says Mrs. Severin. "The home woman does not object to giving her age, but the business woman most assuredly does. I found young women under 30 working in large offices, who said they did not vote because of the age requirement. Their reasons are not foolish. Business men want girls of a certain age for certain positions. The women are likely to lose the positions if it is discovered that they are older than they appear.

"We shall make a strong effort through our legislative department so that women will not be required to give their exact age. 'Legal age' should be enough.

"The business women—and there are many thousands of them in Chicago—are our best citizens. We must see to it that they cast a vote, for it will be an intelligent vote, which will offset that cast by the uninformed voter.

"On the last Monday of November, the 30th of the month, the winter campaign of the Illinois Republican woman's organization campaign will be launched. A general meeting has been called for that day, when the president of each ward as well as the secretary and two delegates and women representing the six country districts will meet together and outline plans for the campaign.

"Every ward in the city will be thoroughly organized before the primary election in February. The Republican women are waking up. When there were no ward organizations they did not vote. Now that they are affiliating with their party they will go to the polls. I have found the women most responsive in my own ward, the Twenty-fifth.

"It is the plan of the association to hold several large massmeetings downtown at which the candidates will be invited to speak. In this way the women will have a chance to judge of the aldermanic and mayoralty timber. Meetings will also be held in every ward. When the time comes for the primary they will be prepared to pick their candidates intelligently."

Mrs. Severin states there will be no attempt made by the Republican women to put the candidates on record for or against public measures which are likely to come up during their term of office. "This is a great cosmopolitan city," she said, "and it would be a terrible mistake to make a generally good all round man pledge himself to certain measures which might lose him thousands of votes. One does not need pledges from a man whose past record has been good, and pledges from the other sort of man do not amount to as much as the paper they are written on."

Willis Nance, the alderman, as well as Isaac Powell, who have been spoken of as possible Republican candidates for mayor, are looked upon favorably by Mrs. Severin and many of the members of the organization.

Mrs. Joanna Downes, president of the Illinois Woman's Democratic league, predicts that the organization will be one of the strong factors in the choice of a mayor. She estimates that its membership will swell to 35,000 before the election. At present it numbers 20,000 women. "Our women's organization is going to be the live wire in the Democratic party in the spring campaign," declares this energetic leader.

Mrs. Downes also believes that the woman voter who obtains a good bird's-eye view of a candidate's record, is wiser than the woman who tries to make him pledge himself for certain issues. "A man is either clean or he is not clean," she says. "If he is not a clean politician he will not live up to any promises which he might make while he is a candidate. If he is a good, strong man he will merely strengthen the estimate you obtained of him when you looked up his record."

The league is at work to perfect closer organization in the city. Regular meetings will be held once a month until election and ward meetings will soon be inaugurated.

Mrs. Mary Mills, the president of the recently organized Illinois Woman's Progressive association, says that organization is to be the watchword of the members from now until election day.

"Organization is our greatest need," said Mrs. Mills. "That was proven on Nov. 3. Our progressive women have become entangled in so-called nonpartisanship which leads nowhere. That word 'nonpartisan,' as many women understand it, is most dangerous. It has caused the progressive women to scatter their forces and go down to defeat. I shall stand for absolute partisanship until all political parties stand for nonpartisanship in municipal affairs. I'm tired of being first aid to the Democratic party."

Petitions have been circulated for Mrs. Mills that she may enter the spring campaign as an aldermanic candidate, but she denies that she will run if Ald. Charles Merriam is a candidate again.

A dance will be given next Saturday in aid of the Big Sisters, of which Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is president.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—There's a revolt on. A prominent society woman stopped me in Fifth avenue, just as she was getting into her limousine.

"I'm planning a benefit," she started in without any preliminary.

"Cotton?" I asked.

"Decidedly, no. No, this is for the silk merchants of Paterson, N. J. All are to come attired in satain, silk, or velvet. And the benefit is this: Everybody is to buy a worm!"

As she stepped into her limousine she flung back at me over her shoulder, "Isn't that the answer?"

She is one of the prominent members of the committee for the dance to be held at the Colony club on Nov. 30. All the debutantes are looking forward to this affair, as it is to be one of the gayest of the season. But the proceeds are to go to the New York visiting committee. For, like this spokeswoman, there are many who believe that in the press of war American charity is being diverted to foreign parts and to special peoples. And inasmuch as it is one of the primary duties of America to keep up its own standards, society is reacting in favor of the "home" needs.

Among the patronesses for this dance are Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. James J. Higginson, Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, and Mrs. Willard D. Straight.

Then there will be an entertainment given on Nov. 30 at the Ritz in aid of the Virginia Day nursery. The feature will be the tableaux dansant presented by some of those who appeared at the entertainment last month at Clarence Mackay's country home. The committee on arrangements includes Mrs. Richard Irving, Mrs. Henry H. Duryea, Mrs. H. Fairfield Osborne, and Mrs. H. Hobart Porter.

For the aid of the Big Sisters, of which organization Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is president, a dance will be given at the Ritz on Nov. 28.

The guild of the St. Timothy alumnæ will also give a dance for the benefit of the children's club of St. Ambrose, in Harlem's "Little Italy." The executive committee is headed by Mrs. George Whitney Jr.

America is beginning to look to its own.

The first night at the opera opened with unusual brilliance. As why should it not, when it now costs about $200,000 to enter the golden horseshoe as a box owner. A generation ago it cost just half as much. Query: Is this an indication of the increase in the high cost of living?

Always the interest of that night was centered on the Astor box. Years ago there was one social leader in Gotham—Mrs. Astor. When, on account of ill health, she retired from the parterre, Mrs. John Jacob Astor took her place—that is, in the box, hardly in the social scheme. Just three years ago it was the second Mrs. John Jacob Astor who occupied the box at the opening of the season. This year the occupant was the latest Mrs. Astor—Mrs. Vincent Astor. But, after a period of mourning of over two years and a half, Mrs. John Jacob Astor will appear—but not in No. 7. She is to occupy the W. Seward Webbs' box on odd Mondays.

In spite of the fact that one foreigner blames the war on the tango, or the tango on the war, the younger set is setting into its dancing stride, or, rather, its dancing trot, for the fox trot seems to lead at the beginning of this season. Dances are everywhere.

The first evening dance of the class organized by Mrs. Lindsley Tappin and Mrs. George K. B. Wade was held this week at the Biltmore. Mrs. Richard A. Peabody, Mrs. M. Banks Taylor, Mrs Louis du Pont Irving, Mrs. James P. Lee, and Miss Annabella S. Olyphant are among its patronesses.

On Tuesday evening, in the rose room of the Plaza, Miss Julia Cutting had her first Tuesday dance. Its patronesses are Mrs. James A. Burden Jr., Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. M. Lawrence Keene, Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, Mrs. Allan Appleton Robbins, and Mrs. Goodhue Livingston.

Departing from the usual conventional receptions, several mothers introduced their daughters to society this week with a dance. In the large, simply dignified house of the old Gilford family, in Lexington avenue, Mrs. John Parkin Gilford introduced Miss Amy Gilford on Thursday at a reception at which there was general dancing, both in the afternoon and in the evening.

Miss Gretchen Damrosch made her debut on Friday at a dance given by her mother, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, at the Cosmopolitan club.

Society is greatly interested in the engagement of Miss Emily Hope Hamilton to Harry Livingston Kauffman. Miss Hamilton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hamilton. She made her debut two years ago, and she was a bridesmaid for both Lady Decies and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel Jr.

Rumor says that the wedding is to be in January, and that probably among her attendants will be her young sister-in-law, Mrs. Arthur Gould Hamilton, who was Miss Elizabeth Van Heuse, and little Gloria Gould, and Mrs. Drexel's baby daughter, Edith. The honeymoon is to be spent in the south and in California.

All Chicago Is Applauding "Alice" in her Adventures in Wonderland brought to life. My, how real it seems and how the kiddies view it in wide-eyed amazement, for there is Alice disappearing down the rabbit's hole, or swimming with a great large mouse in the Pool of Tears, or dancing with the fearsome Gryphon and the huge Mock Turtle, or standing in horror as the executioner chases the King—but really the children must see this marvelous holiday spectacle. THE EASTERN THEATER OF WAR

On the frontiers of the three great countries shown herewith—Russia, Austria, Germany—are massed the largest armies ever known. The latest dispatches say that there already has begun what many authorities believe will be the most titantic battle in history. This story and map depict the immense territory involved, and shed light upon the movements of the opposing hosts for the last ten weeks. The tremendous significance of the struggle in this vast section has not been realized because of the meager reports permitted by the censor, yet the chances are great that the battle now being fought may settle the war of the nations.

WITHIN the territory described in this article by Prof. Martin, an authority on the subject, great battles have been waged, some of which have been reported to the news bureaus, others of which probably have not been heard of, owing to the strictness and efficiency of the censorship. Somewhere within the bounds of this territory the war experts believe must be fought the battle that may settle the war. The outcome of this battle, which dispatches Friday night indicated had already begun, it seems likely, will decide whether the men of the czar will sweep into Germany, or whether the northern hordes will be confined to their own land, unable to threaten Berlin or to draw off the German forces from the south.

More men probably will be engaged in this battle than ever before met in conflict since the world began. Somewhere in this comparatively little known territory will be located a battlefield that will dwarf Waterloo or any of the other famous fields of history in interest to the future generations.

In the following letter to The Tribune Prof. Martin explains the manner in which he gathered the material for his story:

"On the assumption that you would like to consider publishing it, I am sending you herewith a review of the campaign in the eastern field of the European war, written from the point of view of geographical features involved (location, distances, strategic geography, topography, vegetation, races, climate, etc.)

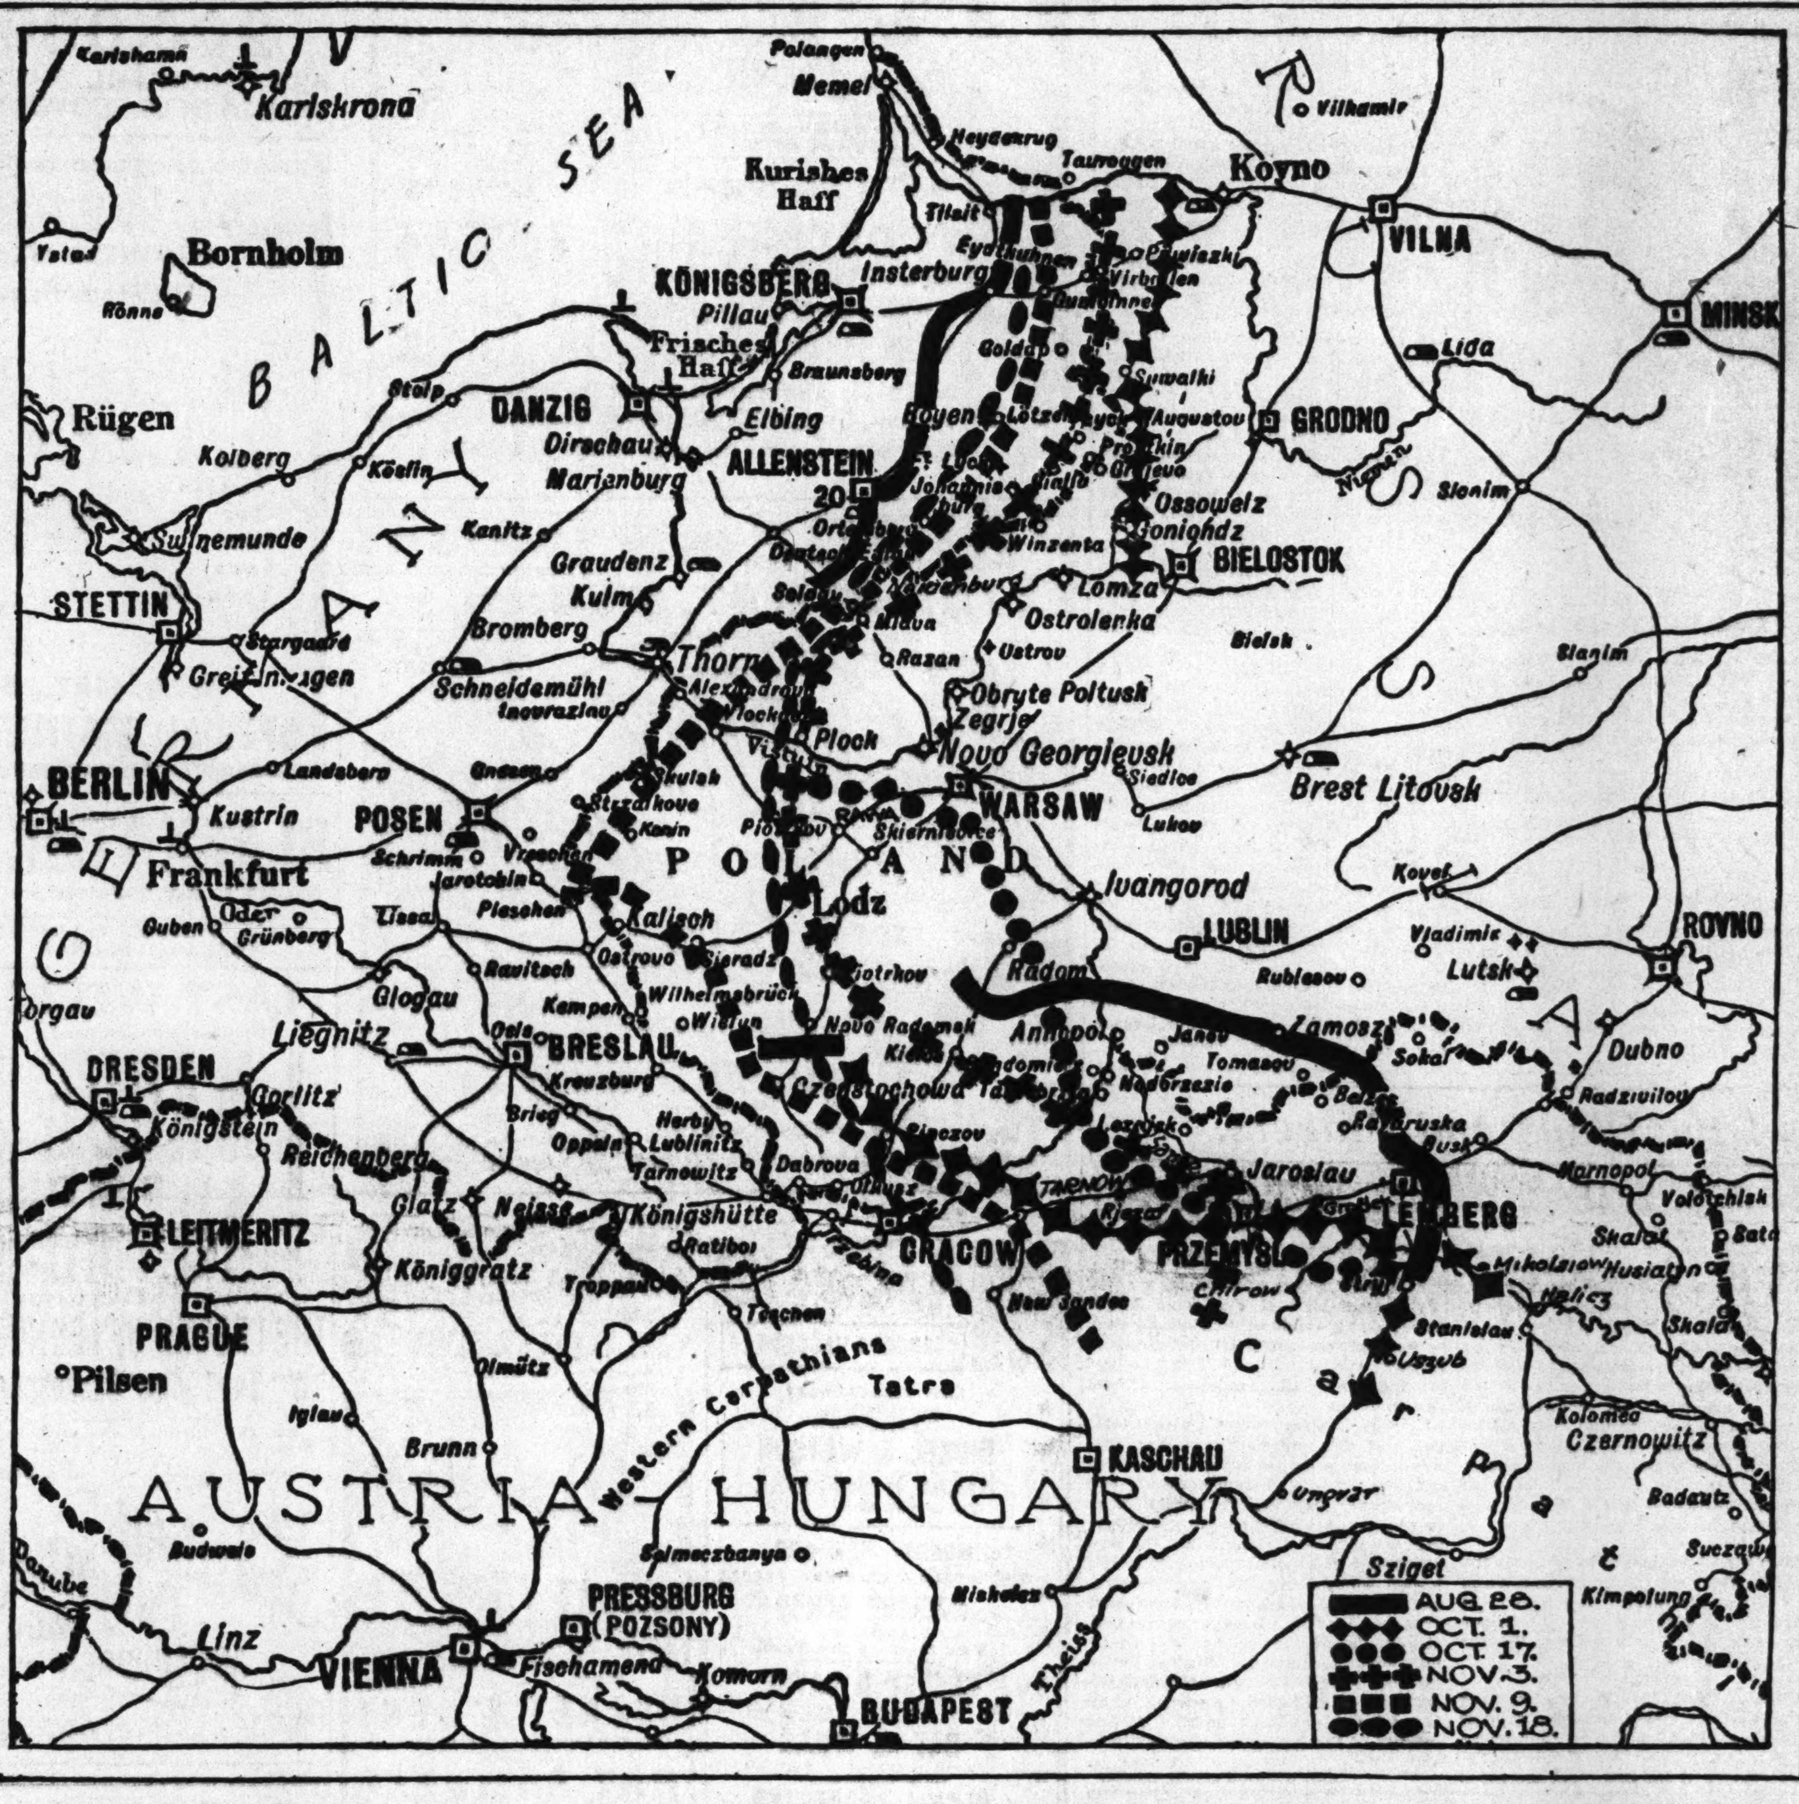
"With it is a map of a sort that has not been published up to this time. The positions shown were plotted precisely from day to day during the last two months on a large scale map.

"I think you can rely on the accuracy of most of the statements in the review. As a college professor and an associate editor of The Bulletin of the American Geographical Society and of the Journal of Geography, I have felt rather cautious about accepting locations and dates unless they were verified.

"I have accordingly read two American newspapers (The Chicago Tribune and The New York Times); two German newspapers (the Taegliche Rundschau and the Deutsche Tageszeitung); two American weeklies (The Nation and The Literary Digest), and the weekly edition of The London Times, so that if I haven't the facts correctly it is because they aren't available in America.

"I started this map in connection with my work of teaching physical geography at the University of Wisconsin, and partly because this eastern campaign is so hard to follow unless you know the geography, and just the other day decided to write the review. Nothing just like it for the Russian campaign has appeared in any American newspaper or magazine.

"LAWRENCE MARTIN."



On this map are indicated the Russian-German and Russian-Austrian battle line at different dates. It will be noticed that on the two earliest dates the battle lines in the north and south are not connected. Troops may have been stationed in the intervening space, but the map is intended to show only the location of the troops actively engaged.

Six stages of the war in the north can be followed on this map. In the early part of the war the Russians advanced into East Prussia while the kaiser was making his rapid advance through Belgium and France; the Germans and Austrians on the other hand had managed to cross the boundary line and penetrate Poland a considerable distance before the slower moving Russians were able to gather sufficient force to oppose them successfully.

Tangled up and defeated in the lake region of East Prussia, the Russians then were forced to retire in the north, but meanwhile were making headway in Galicia.

The Germans then brought up troops from the southern line of battle to make an attack on Warsaw, and the Russians hurried their men from the north to protect that city.

Successful before that ancient city, the Russians then advanced all along the line.

The next step was a rapid advance in the center by the Russians and a small advance on their right and left wings. The rapidity of the Russian advance in the center between Nov. 3 and 9 and the equally rapid retreat within the next nine days is due to the fact that they used great numbers of cavalry in that locality.

The final step shows the Russians holding fast in the north, retreating in the center, and making a slight advance in the south.

The six different positions of the lines of battle from Aug. 28 to Nov. 18 are indicated by the heavy black line, the line composed of diamonds, circles, crosses, the broken line, and one composed of ellipses.

By PROF. LAWRENCE MARTIN

(University of Wisconsin.)

THE Russian campaign against Germany and Austria has been carried on in a great plain between mountains and the sea. The situation is similar to that in the war in western Europe, where the armies faced each other in October and November along a continuous northwest-southeast line, about 350 miles in length, from the Jura mountains in Switzerland and the Vosges on the Alsatian frontier to the English channel.

In the eastern campaign the general direction of the west bowing line is more nearly north and south. In this case it will be recalled that the Carpathian mountains are about 350 miles from the Baltic sea, and the line of campaign stretches across the plain in the states of (a) Austrian Galicia, (b) Russian Poland, and (c) German East Prussia, which are about as large as the states of South Carolina, New York, and Maryland plus Delaware, respectively.

The distances involved may be appreciated from the fact that the line of battle is longer than from Chicago to Cairo in southern Illinois. The Russians will have to advance through German territory as far as from Chicago to Indianapolis if they go from western Poland to Berlin. They have advanced in East Prussia a distance equal to that from Chicago to La Salle, losing this distance and being driven back an equal distance in Russia, and then readvancing as far as from Chicago to Kankakee.

The Germans have pushed into Poland to Warsaw, or as far as from Chicago to Peoria, and have been driven back a large part of this distance, then have advanced again.

Most of the plain between the Carpathians and the Baltic is less than 700-1,000 feet above sea level. East Prussia contains a great ridge and is drained by the Niemen or Russ or Memel river and the smaller Pregel and Passarge rivers, which flow north to the Baltic.

The master stream in the plain of Poland is the Vistula or Weichsel, whose three chief tributaries are (a) the Narev from the north, (b) the Bug from the east and southeast, and (c) the San from the south. In western Poland is the small River Warthe or Warta, a tributary of the Oder. The Bug and San rise in Galicia, but most of the province drains southeastward to the Black sea by the Dniester. The Carpathian foreland in Galicia is similar to the Swiss plateau north of the Alps. Part of it is called the Podolian plateau.

The plain between the Carpathians and the Baltic contains much forest and many large swamps. The rivers have severe spring floods. North of the Podolian plateau and east of the Bug river is the basin of the Pripet, a tributary of the Dnieper river. In its headwater region, just east of Poland, is the Pinsk marsh, an area of morasses, trembling forests, and swamps, now partly drained.

It is 250 miles wide and covers about 35,000 square miles, being nearly as large as the state of Indiana. Because of remoteness from the ocean, the East Prussian ridge, Polish plain, and Carpathian foreland have hot summers and cold winters, a climate less favorable for a winter campaign than that of Belgium, France, and western Germany. The harbors of Riga and Memel north of Königsberg are closed by winter ice for over four months, that of Danzig for less than three, that at Greifswald north of Berlin and west of Stettin not quite two, while the port of Lübeck east of Kiel is frozen only a little over a month, and Hamburg never has ice. This shows how the severity of the winter increases from west to east.

The international boundary traverses a plain and seems to be determined by no natural geographical features. Consequently it was easy, while Germany was engaged in her unsuccessful lightning campaign against Paris, for the Russians to invade East Prussia where they chose, as soon as Germany declared war on Russia, the first day of August.

Northeastern Prussia is a lowland with many swamps, but southward near the Russian frontier is the Baltic ridge, an enormous terminal moraine of the Scandinavian ice sheet with rough topography, hills reaching an altitude of 500 to 1,000 feet, and great numbers of lakes. The lake district is called Masuria.

The exact extent to which these topographic features have figured in determining routes and affecting battles in the campaign in East Prussia is not apparent from the meager newspaper dispatches thus far available. The Russians' invasion followed three lines, crossing the Prussian frontier on Aug. 16 (a) at Eydtkuhnen east of Königsberg, (b) near Lyck, fifty miles to the south, and (c) at Neidenburg, eighty miles farther to the southwest.

Northern Germany, east of the Vistula, projects some 160 miles farther into Russia than do the southeastern states of Posen and Silesia, so that this Prussian campaign was evidently aimed at Königsberg and Danzig rather than at Berlin [see map], which is only 180 miles from the Polish frontier south of Thorn and east of Posen, or about as far as from New York to Baltimore.

This Prussian campaign may have been undertaken in order to divert German troops from the line opposing the allies in northern France or from the main Russian army in Poland, or to prevent a flanking movement from East Prussia into northeastern Poland, or even in part for moral effect, as has been suggested regarding the French invasion of Alsace-Lorraine.

Gumbinnen, twenty miles inside the Prussian frontier, was reached in three or four days, then Insterburg and Tilsit, and, finally, points only seventeen to thirty-five miles from Königsberg. Farther to the southwest, Bialla, Johannisburg, Ortelsberg, and Soldau fell into the hands of the Russians the last week in August, although the Germans had won skirmishes at some of these places earlier in the month, and actually held Mlava, five miles inside the Russian frontier, on Aug. 18.

By Aug. 28 the Russians had advanced fifty to seventy miles into Prussia, reaching the position shown by the heavy line in the map. The area invested is largely inhabited by Poles, while the region to the north, near the Baltic, has Germans. There was fighting at Allenstein, nearly sixty miles from the boundary. Here the Germans won an important victory, as they did, also, at Tannenburg, in the terminal moraine south of Osterode, on Aug. 29, where the Russians lost many men.

Being reinforced by troops from the French campaign, the Germans drove the Russians back out of Prussia by the middle of September and fifty miles into Russia to Grodno, on the river Niemen, along which a week long battle was fought about the last of September. The only geographical feature which seems to have counted in this part of the campaign is the River Niemen, whose shallow valley was not a strong natural line of defense, and yet along which the Russians checked the German advance toward Vilna and Riga.

Subsequently the Russians have readvanced to or past the Prussian frontier, winning victories at Suwalki, Drusskeniki, and Augustowa, the latter being a great five days' battle, ending about Oct. 4. Lyck, which is fifteen miles inside the German frontier, was reoccupied by the Russians on Oct. 7, but there was little further advance in East Prussia till the first week in November.

The absence of attack upon Königsberg, Memel, and Danzig by the Russian navy seems to be due partly to the geographical feature of shallow water in the haffs [lagoons] behind the nehrungs [sandbars with dunes] on the Baltic coast, but chiefly to the mines in the entrances to these three harbors and to the ease with which ships from the German fleet could proceed eastward from Kiel to the defense of these ports. It is not known whether the larger part of the Russian fleet is at Libau, which is 120 miles northeast of Königsberg and only forty miles from the German frontier, near Memel, or at Kronstadt, near Petrograd.

The second part of the eastern campaign has been fought out in Galicia and southeastern Poland, taking place at the same time as the fighting in East Prussia. Most of Galicia east of the San is inhabited by Russians. Austria north of the Carpathians is wide open to Russian invasion. The Podolian plateau, which is partly in Galicia and partly in Russia, has a 600 foot escarpment on the Russian side near the Bug and Dnieper rivers, but the frontier has no topographic aid to defense.

Less than a quarter of Galicia is forested. The Carpathian foreland has a height of 800 to 1,500 feet, so that the tributaries of the Dniester and the San have cut valleys of 200 to 500 feet in depth, and these seem to have guided the lines of invasion to some extent. By Aug. 10 the Austrians had three army corps in the field east of Lemberg.

A corps consists of 30,000 to 50,000 men. The first skirmish occurred at Zalocze the next day, the Russians having invaded Austrian territory with the vanguard of the six corps which faced them. During the first week in September the Russians captured the fortified capital city, Lemberg, about sixty miles inside the Austrian frontier. They then besieged and isolated the great fortress of Przemysl, fifty-five miles farther west.

Early in August the Austrians had invaded southeastern Poland, and on Aug. 21 they had two army corps north of Kielce, over forty miles inside the Russian border, while seven corps had crossed the River San and were heading toward Lublin. They were less than ninety miles southwest of the great Russian concentration camp at Brest Litovsk on the Bug river. They seem to have turned the Russians back near Krasnik, east of the San, in two battles during the last week in August.

However, the Russians soon had a million and a half troops to face the Austrian million. They met on a titanic line of battle 150 to 200 miles in length and the Austrians had to yield, but not without a stubborn series of fights.

The Russians eventually drove the Austrians westward sixty or seventy miles over the Galician and Polish battlefields of Grodek, Rawaruska, Tomassow, Lublin, and Ivangorod to the line of the rivers San and Vistula, always apparently with the river valleys as temporarily effective factors. The valley of the San is 350 to 1,000 feet in depth in some places. The swamps of the Galician and Polish plains seem to have aided the Russians in the decimation of the Austrian army corps.

Halicz and Mikolajow, southeast of Lemberg, were captured by the Russians by the middle of September and Jaroslau and Chirow, near Przemysl, before the end of the month. Although the great topographic barrier of the Carpathian mountain rampart has protected Hungary from invasion, the passes have been entered by victorious Rusisans, who penetrated as far as Uzsok the latter part of September.

Parties of Cossacks went forty miles into Hungary to Ungvar, south of the Carpathians. The hesitation along the San in October seems to mark only the reinforcement of the Austrian line by the Germans rather than any permanent turn in the tide. On Oct. 29 the Russians were advancing west of the San, and when Przemysl falls they will doubtless control all Galicia from Lemberg to Cracow. Tarnow, which is less than fifty miles east of Cracow, was in the hands of the Russians between Sept. 25 and the first of October, but was lost and won again. On Nov. 8 it was reported that the Russians had cut off over 500,000 Austrian troops; so that, with retreat to Cracow impossible, they would have to surrender or else cross the snow covered passes of the high Carpathians in order to escape into Hungary.

Austria has been under the disadvantage of having two army corps in the western campaign in France for a time and a large force facing the Servians in Bosnia, as well as suffering from disease, the Asiatic cholera having broken out among the troops in Galicia about the middle of October.

Bukovina is an Austrian province southeast of Galicia and similar in topography. Nearly half its area is in forest. It is about a fourteenth as large as Illinois, or half as large as Massachusetts. Here the Austrians seem to have held back the Russians rather well, although no strong force has been sent against this unimportant province.

Czernowitz, the capital, is reported as won and lost and won again by the Russians; and early in October a party of Russians had crossed the Carpathians and were at Rodna Pass in Transylvania. Bukovina, joined to the Roumanian and Russian plain, separated from Austria-Hungary by the great wall of the Carpathians, and inhabited by peoples of Russian and Roumanian blood, would naturally belong to Roumania or Russia rather than Austria-Hungary.

Between Galicia and East Prussia lies Poland, a low, rolling plain of flat lying young rocks, almost completely covered by glacial deposits, much as in Wisconsin, Michigan, and Illinois. It stands 250 to 700 feet above sea level, Lysa Gora, a small upland area near Kielce, reaching 2,000 feet. About one-fifth of Poland is forest. Its predominantly Polish population has certainly not been anti-Russian in sympathy during the campaign. Here the first months of the war were without notable activity, although on Aug. 21 the Germans had an army corps in Poland north of Czenstochowa, sixty miles from Cracow.

The undefended city of Lodz, sixty miles north of Cracow, was occupied by a German force early in September. The Germans invaded Poland in larger numbers the last week in September, but were defeated at Kalisz on the frontier. Russian forces are reported as threatening an advance toward Breslau three different times during the month of September, but without success.

Considerably later the Germans entered Poland in force between Thorn, Kalisz, and Cracow, rapidly penetrating 125 miles to the east of their frontier, and driving the Russians back to Blonie and Senkocin. Here the Germans were within eight to fourteen miles of Warsaw, which was in serious danger of capture the second week in October. They seem to have held all Poland west of the Vistula at one time, but never to have been able to cross the shallow valley of the Vistula, whose volume is such that it tends to be effective as a geographic barrier.

From this position the Russians forced the Germans back, first outflanking them with cavalry from the fortress of Nova Georgievsk, northwest of Warsaw, where the Bug enters the Vistula, so that the first week in November (see map) saw them driven more than sixty miles to the southwest, past Lowicz, Skierniewice, and Rawa, to Lodz, Piotrkov, and Kielce, and with difficult marshy country through which to retreat.

The natural line on which they may halt is that of the River Warta or Widawka. Along this river only ten to twenty miles from the German boundary engagements were taking place Nov. 7 near Kolo, Warta, and Sieradz, as well as to the south near Czenstochow.

The next day the Russians crossed the German boundary at Pleschen, fifty miles southeast of Posen.

During November the reports from Petrograd indicated a continuous advance of the Russians—at times at great speed—until the 16th. On that date and on the days following the Germans appear to have been able to stop the onrushing armies of the czar.

The northern wing of the army did not push ahead as rapidly as the center, but the Russians claim they crossed into East Prussia at various points. In the center, preceded by great hordes of cavalry, the Russians made rapid progress, only to be checked and again driven back.

Against the Austrians in the south, however, the czar's army was having better success and by Nov. 18 had pushed its way to Cracow.

At the end of three months of fighting the whole eastern campaign has involved [a] Russian advance, retreat, and readvance in morainic East Prussia; [b] a thorough defeat for Austria in hilly central Galicia; [c] Austrian advance and retreat in swampy southeastern Poland, and [d] German advance and retreat and advance in the plain of southwestern Poland. Russia has failed to make notable progress toward Berlin, which has no hilly country between as Cracow and no mountain barrier as in the case of Vienna.

It is highly creditable to Germany that her armies still spread out beyond both her eastern and western frontiers after more than three months of fighting, a period half as long as that of the whole Franco-Prussian war in 1870-'71. On the other hand, Russia has repulsed strong German forces near the Niemen and before Warsaw. She has reduced Austria to the position of a burden upon rather than an aid to Germany, and has demonstrated that her forces can advance effectively in the sort of topographic situations that separate her from the German capital, although the plain of eastern Germany could never be crossed with ease by an invading force. The lines of the Rivers Vistula and Oder in Germany contain strong topographic positions for defense, though not as strong as those of the low mountains between Berlin, the Rhine, and France.

News Notes of the Plays and Players.

Mlle. Samya and M. Albert, dancers, exiled from Paris by the war, have been imported by Mr. Frank of Rector's to divert the patrons of that institution while dining. They were a part of the gay life of the gay Olympia until that gay life ceased, and they will begin this evening to add the adjective "riant" to the vocabulary of the loop.

Of "The Passing Show of 1914" Mr. Frank Wilstach writes officially: "It is a mangler of melancholy and bouncer of the blues. It electrifies the gloom and sends a [illegible] through the veins of the frigid. It is an uproarious upheaval of lingerie and laughter—a mastodon of musical extravagance—an effulgent effervescence of engaging enchantresses." Mr. Wilstach was recently the literary agent of William Faversham and Sothern and Marlowe.

N. C. Goodwin views with displeasure the American popularity of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

"There is no denying the fact that as a nation we prate about patriotism that does not exist," says he. "Every foreign artist who visits our shores finds us ready to bow down and pay homage, be it the mistress of a dethroned king, a bare legged countess, or an anæmic tragedian. I have no desire to be personal, but the adulation, attention, and groveling at the feet of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is to me, as an American actor, simply disgusting. Now, this foreigner, who has done absolutely nothing to advance the art of acting, advertises his farewell to a public who are as fickle as they are undiscriminating and pack the theaters, giving his last performance in New York to receipts that dear Edwin Booth never dreamed of playing to; conspicuous citizens pay him tribute and go forth proclaiming his performance of Hamlet superior to that of Booth. How we Americans forget and fawn."

Miss Blanche Walsh is to return to the stage in the character of the Sea Witch in Edward Sheldon's "The Garden of Paradise," a dramatization of a Grimm fairy tale, in which Miss Emily Stevens is to disport as a mermaid.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—[To the Dramatic Critic.]—I was disappointed to read your critical agreement with other Chicago reviewers in approving Miss Maude Adams' performance of Barrie's "The Legend of Leonora." I am sure Miss Adams is a charming woman off the stage, and I must confess that I cannot forget Mrs. Campbell's Leonora, in London. After these admissions I have to submit that Miss Adams' acting of Leonora is absolutely execrable. If one could forget Chantecler it would be unbelievable that an actress responsible for the exquisite scenery and lighting of "The Ladies' Shakespeare" could commit such artistic sins in acting.

Leonora is a very woman, we are told. Can you conscientiously say that Miss Adams was a convincing mother or that she was for one moment a siren? Not once did she show that she loved Rattray really; not once did she make one believe that she was bewitching him. The part demands a fascination, an ability to cast a spell, which the boyish Peter Pan mannerisms of Miss Adams never indicated even faintly. The Adams gibbering enunciation, the Adams bobbings of the head, blinkings, ceaseless, meaningless smiles, moans, convulsive arm movements—these shattered Leonora's magic. As for the "heavy emotion" of Miss Adams' playing of the last act—it was totally inexplicable.

MISS MAUDE ADAMS as KATHERINE, THE SHREW in "THE LADIES' SHAKESPEARE

MISS MOLLY McINTYRE in "KITTY McKAY" at the PRINCESS.

Miss Maude Adams in "The Legend of Leonora."

By Percy Hammond.

MR. SHAW once expostulated with Mr. Barrie for his cheerful assumption that one endearing quality in a character implied all endearing qualities, that he disregarded human nature's paradox that an assassin may be kindly, a saint vindictive, or a lovable woman full of unlovely attributes. This habit, Mr. Shaw complained, turned the Barrie stage into a pretty playground for the thoughtless populace, but it afforded no pleasure to those who, like Mr. Shaw, do not go to the theater to be pleased.

Mr. Shaw's remarks are not mentioned to show that Mr. Barrie, by them, was influenced when he conceived Leonora of "The Legend of Leonora," for they were made twenty years ago and are, no doubt, forgot. Leonora, however, is an emphatic reversion from the practice to which Mr. Shaw took umbrage—at least she is so superficially and for a little while as impersonated by Miss Adams (to Mr. Barrie's satisfaction) in the delectable play at the Blackstone.

Thus she is presented in the quaint, fragrant, sentimental Barrie way as seven women—one with a sense of humor, one without; an old fashioned, clinging woman, and a coquette who goes to fancy dress balls as a bacchante; a suffragist, and a mother who weeps at her son's petition for his first razor. As if entirely to flout Mr. Shaw's description of his limitations, Mr. Barrie makes her also a murderess. She pushed a man out of a railway carriage because he insisted on an open window, though Milly, her little daughter, had a sniffy cold.

These various traits are humorously separated and blended in the first act of "The Legend of Leonora," which is in itself a complete and effective bit of fantasy. There Capt. Rattray of the royal navy, invited to meet seven women, endeavors to discover which one of them Leonora is. To see, for instance, if she is the woman with a sense of humor he tells her the funny story of the lady who, noticing the bald head of the man next to her at dinner as he bent to pick up his napkin, said: "No melon, thank you." He is sure she is the mother when she tells him that she would like her son's first razor to be not too sharp and something suitable for a boy, fair, and five feet ten. His horror when he learns that Leonora has killed a man involves him in the great indignation of his fellow guests. From this he escapes divertingly. "I did not know," says he, in extenuation, "that your little girl had a cold." You will find Mr. Charles Hammond's impersonation of this nice sailor man, I think, a most ingratiating one.

Complaint has been made by eminent English critics that the trial of Leonora is spoiled for them by the utter unreality of the proceedings. They acknowledge Mr. Barrie's right to adopt an absurd posture of circumstances, but they hold that the treatment of these circumstances should be all the more rigidly veristic. The scene is, of course, almost ludicrous travesty, but it has a clairvoyant quality that makes it quite the most plausible thing of its kind I have seen in a theater. The difference between it and reality is that the participants are stripped of habit and convention, announcing their thoughts and feelings instead of secreting them. It is easy, for example, to imagine Mr. Justice Grimdike, impatient at Leonora's long absence from the courtroom, saying to himself, "It is very dull without her." Mr. Barrie causes the magistrate to make this yearning audible. Mr. Tovey, listening anxiously to his wife's testimony, would naturally desire to caution her to be careful, so instead of merely thinking a whistle of warning he whistles it. So, indeed, does the justice himself, and the egregious Mr. Lebetter, who, in Mr. Peyton Carter's impersonation is so funny when, ejected from the courtroom, he shouts, "Cad! Cad!" to Leonora's stupid advocate. It is preposterous for a juror to say to the court, "Take your hand away from your mouth; we can't hear what you are saying," but it is not preposterous for the juror to feel like saying it. Parenthetically—in the case of Mr. Lebetter, I suspect that Mr. Barrie left a loose thread for the sake of a joke. He has Mrs. Tovey saying naively in the first act, "Isn't it lucky that Mr. Lebetter is to appear for the prosecution?"—though Mr. Lebetter in the next act does not so appear.

Leonora and Miss Adams are a delightful study in the psychology of homicide. Obviously unfamiliar with the Dostieffskian theory of humanitarian assassination, they proceed to expound their blithely emotional conviction that it was thoroughly all right to kill the gentleman who lifted the car window on Milly's sniffy cold. That is their refrain, "Milly had a cold!" "You see," says Leonora to the jury, "my little girl had a cold. I'm not sure that she is more subject to colds than the other children, but Milly—it seems to pull Milly down more than it does the others." Whereupon every one in the courtroom understands that Milly's mother was justified. "How many children have you?" inquires Mr. Justice Grimdike. "Would you consider seven a large number?" Leonora responds. As a matter of fact, you do consider seven rather a large number and Mr. Barrie's emphasis of the maternal note might be more effective if his heroine's progeny were less numerous. But you will probably forget the small things in the skill and the charm of Miss Adams' impersonation. Of course there are those to whom Miss Adams' stage ways are poison, and I have often been among them, but as Leonora I find her fascinating. From the moment she breezes into the prisoner's dock, inquiring airily, "Am I taking any one's place?" to her exit on the arm of the justice she is to me exquisite—not faultless certainly, but irresistible. Among half a dozen other fine performances that of Mr. Arthur Elliott as the justice is to be commended for unusual excellence. A superior dignitary, petulant, elegant of phrase, quizzical, laughing at his own jokes, and acting with much unobtrusive detail, Mr. Justice Grimdike has a wonderfully impersonal characterization by this deft satirist. You may recall Mr. Elliott as the bishop in "The Servant in the House."

It is Mr. Elliott who at the end speaks Mr. Barrie's cynical analysis of the fable—a fable which I believe is a bit the worse for having the true fabular "sting in the tail." "This is the sort of thing," says he to Leonora, "you might have done had your little girl had a cold. And this is how we might have acted had you done it." Therein is the soft Barrie glow, and it makes you warm and comfortable—to be disturbed a moment later by an embittered continuation of the parable. There are no more ladies like Leonora, Mr. Barrie says. She is a legend, an out of date, womanish creature as were our mothers and our grandmothers. The women of today are different—and wiser. They may be so, Mr. Barrie, but there are still mothers as Leonora is a mother—ready on occasion to be as unreasoning and as murderous, mentally, as your heroine, and as indifferent, alas, as she is to Mr. Leonora, about whom nothing is said in the play except that he is no more.

Mr. Barrie's "The Ladies' Shakspeare" fails, perhaps, because neither of its actors is equipped to give it the gust and vigor demanded, however erroneously, by the tradition of the noisy farce of which it is an inversion. In the course of it Miss Adams states that only three of the words of "The Taming of the Shrew" have been changed by Mr. Barrie. The humility with which I asked the numerous members of Miss Adams' entourage to identify those three words was mitigated. None of them, from the stage director down, was able to tell me; and a conscientious perusal of the drama left me decisively baffled. What are those three words? When the London public failed to penetrate "The Legend of Leonora," Mr. Barrie added the explanatory tag mentioned above. One knows that those three words are lurking with the "sunny malice of a faun" somewhere in "The Ladies' Shakespeare." May Mr. Barrie's laughter be more silvery when he brushes aside the vapors and reveals them to us.

News of the Plays and Players.

Mr. Frohman has ordered his actors to appear in no more war benefits and has closed the theaters in his control against philanthropies of the kind. His argument is that the players themselves this season need charity as much as any one else.

Opinions About Music Writing.

A NUMBER of persons took active enough interest in the debate concerning music reporting begun last week to write, more or less bitterly, to THE TRIBUNE. The views of most of these are presented below. The letters are not printed entire:

"The letter written by the Society of American Musicians is entirely according to my views. Those who read the musical criticisms are either active musicians or are intelligent people who want a serious, dependable account of a concert. Other people don't read the music news anyway.

"HARRIET PORTER DIETRICH."

Mr. Glenn Dillard Gunn, formerly music critic of THE TRIBUNE, makes his position clear concerning the letter of protest printed in THE TRIBUNE last Sunday. His letter, in part, follows:

"Although my name appeared as director of the Society of American Musicians, I trust that it is not necessary for me to assure you that I had nothing to do with the letter from the organization published in THE TRIBUNE Sunday. The society meets on the first Monday of every month. It was at the meeting held Monday, Nov. 2, that the secretary was instructed to prepare the letter in question. On that evening I was engaged as conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra's first American program, and naturally did not attend the meeting.

"Hearing later that such action had been taken, I protested to the president, Mr. Spry, that I regarded it as exceedingly ill advised. He informed me that the letter had not been sent, and I assumed that it would not be.

"Finally, may I call your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter to the secretary of the society in which I offer my resignation as director."

"I venture as a layman and as an ardent admirer of your newspaper a few observations on the 'experiment' of your editor and upon musical criticism in general. Mr. Webster's experiment undoubtedly deserves strong commendation, for the idea is a unique one and the theory along which it is based a purposeful one. Musical criticism should be popularized; it should represent the view of a music loving and not of a musician public. Criticism based on musical technicality is out of place in the columns of a daily newspaper and is of little interest to the concertgoer who is sincere in his enjoyment of music for music's sake. The trouble with Mr. Webster's criticisms or impressions of the concerts I believe to be this: He disregards the fact that there exists a public of music goers, even though it be smaller than [baseball] fandom in numbers who make up the bulk of the audiences at musical gatherings. I fear he comes to the concert hall believing that this musical public is a rather vague unreality. One morning he savors of Doris Blake, the next like Wallie Eckersall.

Another: "We have altogether too much criticism by experts. It is my opinion that every reviewer should have as an assistant some 'sht red necked' person whose duty would be to furnish the subject matter for the reviews, thus leaving the professional critic free to devote all his energy to molding this material into literature. The average reader is not interested in the technical methods by which an artist elaborates the 'plot' of his composition, his novel, or his play. The average reader cares not at all for a technical dissection of any work of art. His interest is in emotions, not in science. In a word, he is vitally interested in being interested. It seems to me Mr. Webster has proven his case and acquitted himself creditably, while Mr. Beard and his society have besmirched their cause. ALLEN L. D[illegible]

"I suppose no statesman would be willing to [illegible] policies by the opinions of a child, and so I take it that [illegible] we want in musical criticism likewise is not the opinion of a layman or of the multitude but of the best expert we can get. "I heartily agree with the protest of the musicians against the sort of stuff printed in your paper as music criticism. My protest, however, is not from the musician's standpoint but that of the public. Opinions About Music Writing.

"Permit me to congratulate THE TRIBUNE on the extremely interesting experiment that is being tried in the music department. It is high time that something was done to counteract the desiccating process that is going on in the judgment of music, especially among the members of the audience at the Chicago Symphony concerts. They are all in danger of becoming that most horrible of all things, a professional amateur, culture fed and idea proof. But it isn't altogether their fault. Largely, I think, the blame for this is due to the brand of technical criticism that has been the fashion here and elsewhere in America. The poor public will believe you if you assure it solemnly that music is something profound and metaphysical, only to be grasped, like the holy grail, after prayer and fasting. Evanston believes it now. The whole Friday afternoon audience goes to learn and to be edified, not to enjoy. As the French say, 'It is to weep!'

"Anything is better than this state of affairs. Whether you succeed with your experiment in killing the god of the Philistines is problematic. Probably he will survive. But at least the attempt is worth while!

"AN INTERESTED READER."

"Mr. Ronald Webster's 'Apologia Pro Vita Sua' is, in my mind, as much of a joke as his comments on musical affairs.

"It is true that baseball players are not intrusted with reporting baseball news, and the political reporter is not a politician, but it is also true that the man who is intrusted with reporting either baseball or politics is a man who understands the game and can write a fair criticism intelligently. You have one of Chicago's foremost doctors write your column 'How to Keep Well.' Why should you not, therefore, have a man who understands music write your musical criticisms, and one who can comment upon them in an unprejudiced and dignified manner?

"The people who attend concerts are music lovers and are anxious to know what the music critic has to say, so as to compare their own ideas with the ideas of one who is supposed to have a technical knowledge of music. I am not a musician, but appreciate good music and attend concerts whenever I can. Not being a musician, I am anxious to know more about the music I listen to, and therefore go to the music critic for education, and believe that the majority of laymen do the same.

"Aida" Opens Century Season Tomorrow.

By Ronald Webster.

In the Century Opera company performance of "Aida" tomorrow evening, Chicago will see and pass judgment upon one of New York's proudest institutions. New York won't compare the Century company with its Metropolitan (they boast of the latter that it is the only opera house in the world where three languages will be sung); but it has declared the Century company a movement toward the freedom of American art. It has been important enough to demand considerable space twice a week or more with the New York music writers; and because it is "opera for the people," a notice once in a while in the editorial columns.

All of the operas will be sung in English; no "particular bright stars" are to sing them; and the prices are theater prices. Especial attention has been given the ensemble, as much, the directors say, as $5 opera receives. The operas for this week, with their casts, follow:

MONDAY NIGHT—"AIDA."

King, Alfred Kaufman; Amneris, Kathleen Howard; Rhadames, Morgan Kingston; Ramfis, Henry Weldon; Amonasro, Louis Kreidler; messenger, Hardy Williamson; priestess, Jeanette Kann; Aida, Lois Ewell. Conductor, Agide Jacchia.

"The Big Idea" the Big Idea of the New York Season.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Novelty, it has been said, is the big note of this particular theatrical season. Novelty and surprise. Nothing could be more mysterious these days than the rehearsal of a new play. Nothing more secret than the plot of a projected drama.

Playwrights cross the street to avoid each other for fear they may inadvertently let slip an idea. Silly playwrights, to worry so about the impossible! Managers keep themselves behind closed doors and sealed lips. And as for actors! Those who have positions and are rehearsing are so afraid to talk that Broadway is really very quiet.

Yet this week the biggest novelty of the year was produced, and was apparently just as much of a surprise as though it had not been running in Boston for several weeks last passed. "The Big Idea," they call it, and it is. For in it the authors—A. E. Thomas and Clayton Hamilton—have, to express it in poker terms, seen George Cohan's "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and gone him one better.

In the Cohan play, made from Earl Derr Bigger's novel, the hero, you will remember, began the writing of a 10,000 word story in the prologue, and the audience discovered at the tag of the play that what had been acted was really no more than the story shaping itself in the mind of the writer.

In "The Big Idea" the hero, believing that he must commit suicide in order to raise $22,000 needed to save his dear old dad from the penitentiary, is induced at the end of the first act to write the very tragic experiences through which he and his family are passing in the form of a play, and try to raise the needed money on the play before resorting to suicide.

He therefore starts to write the play in which he is appearing, and the audience not only watches the play as it is being acted and written at the same time, but is even present when, in the third act, the first two acts of it are taken to the manager's office and offered for sale.

The scheme of this novel entertainment must sound preposterous in the telling. In fact, the real triumph of both the authors and the actors is that in spite of its preposterousness they force you to believe in it. To all intents and purposes they brazenly confess that they are fooling you as they go along, and yet it makes very little if any difference with your enjoyment of the entertainment they offer.

This, then, is the argument: Well known banker has embezzled large sums of money from his own vaults, thinking to replace it long before the next visit of the examiner. His investments go wrong, he is still $20,000 short, disclosure and disgrace stare him in the face. Three days before the examiner is due he cracks under the strain, confesses his plight to his son, and prepares for the worst.

Son canvasses the situation and all possible ways out and also gives up. Then it occurs to him that if he can kill himself, as if by accident, his life insurance policy should be worth $25,000. His chum is an agent in the company. He can fix it so payment will be rushed, and he is ready to make the sacrifice—when the heroine appears. She is a Vassar girl visiting his sister. She has heard that he is very busy writing (he being an amateur author), but she refuses to end her visit without meeting him. He excuses himself on the plea that he is trying to work out a plot. She offers to help. He substitutes fictitious personages and tells her of the situation in which he finds himself, but she discovers that the story is his own, and that he is the youth planning to sacrifice himself to save his family, which gives her an idea. She knows a theatrical manager and she has heard that plays make a great deal of money. Therefore she suggests that he make a play of the situation he is in and try to raise the money on that. The end of the first act, therefore, sees the boy starting to write what already has occurred.

At the beginning of the second act they have the first act done, but no material to go on with. Then the family begins doing things. The teller of the bank becomes suspicious and furnishes an incident or two. Dramatically enough happens to keep the plot moving at a lively rate. Father even tries to shoot himself, and this adds a very tense incident. But suddenly they discover that one thing is lacking—they have no heart interest. He is the hero and she is the heroine, but they are not in love. At least they insist they are not. So to supply this most important factor they agree that their play shall be true excepting in that one particular. They will pretend, for the sake of the color, that they are in love with each other. He will make love speeches to her and she will answer him. Then they will write them down. And out of their pretending that they are pretending, when each is more than half in earnest, they get a very attractive and bright scene.

The cumulative effect of this novel plot, however, is best illustrated in the third act. When they have finished the second act—a lapse of some hours between scenes being allowed them to make that possible—they dash off to the manager's office to sell their play. At the beginning of the third act they have read him as much as they have written and he is interested. He wants to know what the finish is going to be. They can't tell him. They don't know themselves. He asks if it is to be a happy or an unhappy ending. They don't know.

Finally they confess that they themselves are the hero and heroine of their play and tell him the whole story; that it is every word true and that he himself is acting in the last act of the play that he either is or is not going to buy. That is why they cannot tell him how it is going to end. If he buys the play it will be a comedy. But if he does not buy it it will be a tragedy, for the hero will still be obliged to go through with his suicide plan.

The novelty appeals to him as being a big idea, and he is willing to buy it at the usual rate, advancing them $500. But that won't help them. They must have $22,000 or nothing. He laughs at them. Yet he dislikes the idea of being responsible for the young man's killing himself, if he is crazy enough to do that. Between the pleadings of the playwrights and the wavering of the manager this scene is excellent in both its comedy and sentimental values. Finally a bit of logic is forced into an excuse for the manager's yielding to the boy's promise to go on writing plays until he has paid back the $22,000 in case "The Big Idea" is a failure.

"But do you think the public will like this play?" the manager asks, still undecided.

"O, they will!" shouts the girl, and then, stepping out of character, as Peter Pan did to save the life of Tinker Bell, she reaches over the footlights and cries: "You will like it, won't you; please, please say that you will!" and of course a roar of applause goes back to her. The tag follows when the happy children discover that their heart interest is quite as true as the rest of their play.

The actors have as much to do with making "The Big Idea" convincing as the authors, and the two principals are played by Ernest Glendinning and Desmond Kelly.

There is good reason to speak of this as a season of novelties. It started with "On Trial," which works backward, like a movie. It advanced to "Innocent," in which the principal character commits suicide in the prologue, leaving his journal to be read by his best friend, and then comes to life to act what the friend reads.

It then offered "My Lady's Dress," which is to be this week moved on to Chicago, and in which a young society matron dreams of the comedies and tragedies woven into the material and trimming of her gown, and "The Phantom Rival," in which the heroine, musing in front of a fireplace, watches her first love reappear in all the heroic characters she has pictured his assuming.

Then came the tenderloin morality, "Experience," in which in modern allegory William Elliott follows the career of Youth in this city of temptation, where he meets Experience, Pleasure, Pride, Frivolity, Intoxication, Passion, Poverty, and Crime, and forget all about Love and Hope at home, and his old friend Ambition, from whom he became separated the first day. And now "The Big Idea," which, in many respects, is the cleverest of the lot.

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

November

Thanksgiving.

WE come now to the greatest of all cerealia, appetent, we know, with piety, we trust; to brown the fat, stuffed fowl, bake sweet cakes and put the royal pumpkin into its proper flaky container; to commit, hopefully, feeble digestions to the test of heavy gormandizing.

Of all cerealism festivals this of ours, at once pietistic and stomachic, is the greatest. Frost has locked the productive soil and frozen the ponds, but the warehouses bulge, bins are full, root houses are overflowing, and we over lay a Christian prayer upon a pagan holiday and settle with appreciative sniffs about the flesh pots.

Gluttony is an art lost to these nervous times and when we make a festival for Ceres, in honor of bountiful production, we toddle as amiable but sacrificial victims and lay ourselves upon the rack of repletion. These are not times when Sancho Panza may have a couple pullets and a fat hare ladled out of the pot as a snack to tide him over until dinner.

Nevertheless, with stout hearts, if with weak stomachs, we make a feast once a year at least and trust that a two mile walk, undertaken in groaning heaviness of flesh, will pull us through the night alive and restore us to the normal days of discretion.

There is no resisting the brown of a turkey's breast, nor the stuffing, against which the medical man warns, that lies underneath. Let there be anguish and the lamentations thereof, but we'll be celebrants in this greatest of all cerealia, be trenchermen and take the consequences.

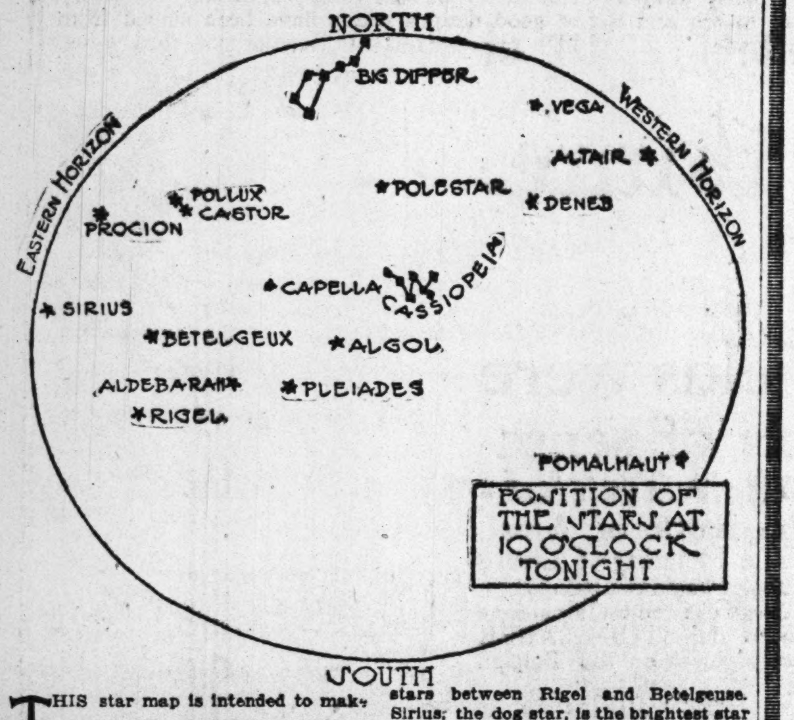
ASTRONOMY.



POSITION OF THE STARS AT 10 O'CLOCK TONIGHT

THIS star map is intended to make the identification of the great suns now in the sky possible. In a star map the eastern and western horizons are reversed. The map gives you below your eyes the sky as it appears above. Generally the direction is given to hold the map over your head, but with an understanding that the eastern and western horizons are reversed this is unnecessary.

To locate a start begin with the pole star and the Big Dipper. If you are in doubt as to the pole star use the pointers of the Dipper, the two stars in the outer edge of the bowl. They point almost directly to it. The distance between the two pointers is five degrees. That is a measuring stick. The distance to the pole star is five times the distance between the pointers.

With Dipper and the pole star as guides, you will find Capella by drawing a line through the pointers to Polaris and then off in an opposite direction from the handle of the Dipper to a distance of 45 degrees. Remember, the measuring stick—nine times its length.

A line drawn through Capella from the pole star and extended 50 degrees south will reach Rigel, the great sun of the constellation Orion. It is a white star. About 16 degrees north of Rigel, and arising before it, is the other great star of the constellation, the orange red Betelgeuse.

Further north than these two stars but coming in at about the same time are Castor and Pollux, the Twins. They are four and a half degrees apart. They identify themselves by their proximity to each other.

The Pleiades are known almost universally by their shimmer or can be identified by it, and following them is Aldebaran, rising soon after Capella. It is almost directly under the Pleiades. A line run from Aldebaran through the belt of Orion and beyond it about 20 degrees to the southeast will point out Sirius.

The belt of Orion is a line of three bright stars between Rigel and Betelgeuse. Sirius, the dog star, is the brightest star we see in these latitudes. A line run 20 degrees northeast from Sirius or 20 degrees east from Betelgeuse will point to Procyon, the Little Dog star.

As Sirius comes up Altair is in the west, ready to set. Vega and Deneb are in the northeast, on the opposite side of the heavens from Capella. For further identification draw a line from the star at the junction of the bowl and handle of the Dipper to the pole star and continue it at right angles in the same direction that the handle of the Dipper points, almost reversing the directions for the finding of Capella.

Fomalhaut is far to the southwest. Identification will be readily established in most cases by these directions, with the pole star and the measuring stick as guides.

Haven: You know something about this shooting, Teresa. I'm an attorney and circumstantial evidence points to you. Now you might as well confess what you know about it and get through with it—this will make it much easier for you in the end.

Teresa: My word! The rep you give me would tarnish a tin tooth.

"Well, never mind that; didn't you shoot him?"

"You certainly have a 'crust.'"

"But you did shoot him?"

"'Tisn't likely I'd go around shooting strange men when I'am engaged to Harry. If I wanted to kill anybody I would kill him, now wouldn't I?"

Haven goes out. His wife, who did the shooting, comes in.

Mrs. Haven: Teresa, I shall never forget your goodness in taking the blame for this murder and saving my "rep."

"O, don't mention it!"

"You are doing a noble act. You don't understand, for you haven't a husband."

"No, I haven't a husband, but I have a home. Such hard luck I am always having, just like my mother—I am even the image of mother."

Harry, a clerk: Teresa, you don't know what you are saying, what you are getting yourself into. Perhaps they might send you up for life and then you never again would have a chance to marry me.

Teresa: O, never mind. The chap I was out with the other night on that champagne supper said: "Teresa, always be kind, it always pays. We live in the greatest democratic country in the world. Every one has a chance in a country like this—why, even a microbe has a chance."

Harry: Then will you marry me?

Teresa: Where do you get that stuff—some moving picture show, I guess.

Holy Family School Holds Golden Jubilee.

Fifty years ago next Tuesday, when blanketed Indians made picturesque the exclusive residential district around Clark and Van Buren streets, a small group of Jesuits, under the leadership of Father Andrew O'Neill, opened a parochial school on the open prairie that lay west of Halsted street. They gave it the name Holy Family school.

On next Tuesday evening the old "grads" of the institution will gather to celebrate its golden jubilee. Among these old graduates are James E. Gorman, first vice president of the Rock Island railroad; James Connell, attorney for the Burlington; Fathers O'Connor and Fitzgerald, leading Catholic writers in the United States, and many men who have gained fame and prominence.

The school shortly after its opening was attended by 1,200 boys, whose instruction was in charge of lay sisters of the church. There are fifty-one living Jesuits, fathers, and scholastics who were pupils of the school, and they will be in attendance on Tuesday evening.

The school is located at 1229-31 South Morgan street. The exercises will be held in the auditorium, and will consist of addresses by the Rev. William D. Murphy, D. D., of St. Thomas Aquinas church; Father George Leahy, S. J.; James McGeary, S. J.; John Masterson, S. J.; Joseph Connell, and Miss Margaret Shannon, all pupils of the school. The closing address will be made by the Rev. Father John Mathery, rector of Loyola university.

Conditions Changed for Speedway Contest.

THE 1915 racing campaign of the Indianapolis motor speedway was opened last week, entry blanks for the next 500 mile race, May 29, having been distributed among manufacturers and private owners here and abroad, to the number of 600. Despite the war no scarcity of entries is anticipated, Italy alone being counted on to produce at least six foreign nominations.

Specifications for the next contest have been much changed from years previous, the chief revisions being the reduction of motor dimensions by one-third, or from 450 to 300 cubic inches, and the raising of the speed minimum to eighty miles. With smaller machines better results are expected. This is the fundamental motive of the racing game.

The number of starters has been raised to thirty-three, as compared with thirty of other years. This is the full capacity allotted the track under the rulings of the American Automobile association, which specify a limit of one car to every 400 feet of track.

Speed trials to determine the final field will be held ten days ahead of the race, in the inverse order of entry, the fastest thirty-three being eligible. In the event of more than three cars of one make to enter, the fastest three will be admitted. This is to eliminate the speedway from controversies between factories and private owners desiring to enter cars of the same make, in excess of the A. A. A. maximum.

Cars will line up for the start in the order of the time made in the speed trials, the fastest car starting in first position, next the pole. Racing numbers will be issued on the same plan, the fastest car receiving No. 1. This is to avoid the possibility of a spill during the flying start, when a slow machine in front would be in the way.

The color of cars will be according to international usage—Germany, white; Belgium, yellow; France, blue; Italy, red, and America, red and white. In previous years individual combinations have been employed, at times to the great amusement of the spectators.

Regulations as to the physical condition of drivers and the mechanical soundness of cars will be more rigidly enforced next year than ever before. The front axles of all machines must thus be entirely new two days before the race. This is to guard against possibility of accident, due to crystallization or other defect. Any car spilling an excess of oil on the track will, for like reasons, be disqualified.

The Dawson-Gilhooley accident of last year has caused chain driven cars to be barred from the track, unless the chains are adequately, though not necessarily fully inclosed. Gilhooley, it will be remembered, came to grief because a bursted tire caught between his chain and gears, rendering his car beyond control, due to the action of his differential. The accident was not, as has often been stated, traceable to incompetence on Gilhooley's part.

Prizes remain substantially the same, $50,000 being split ten ways among the winners, with $20,000 first money. The intermediate trophies, however, including the G. & J. trophy, the Remy cup and brassard, the Prest-O-Lite trophy, and the Wheeler-Schebler cup, will not be withheld, if their winner fails to go the entire distance of 500 miles, as formerly, but will be awarded regardless of their owner's status at the finish. This, it is thought, will speed up the race a great deal.

That exactly the same reason does not exist in the several states for the improvement of their roads was set forth in the unanimously adopted report of the resolutions committee of the American road congress just held in Atlanta, Ga., with the largest attendance ever attracted to a highways meeting.

Chairman W. Tom Winn of the resolutions committee presented this reference to "federal coöperation": Resolved, that the American road congress emphatically indorses the principle of federal coöperation toward the construction of main highways, and thus assist the several states to build the main market roads in the one-half of the country which is devoted to agriculture and to build through main roads in the one-half of the country which is not predominantly agricultural, but whose prosperity depends upon mining, the raising of live stock, and the presence of the health seeker and tourist."

The Greatest Victories Ever Won on Any Tires

SUCH may be said of the Los Angeles-Phoenix and the El Paso-Phoenix Road Races ending November 11th, both of which were won on Firestone Tires. These races put tires to a terrific test in the grueling grind over mountain trails and desert sands.

Firestone TIRES

stood that test as shown by results:

Los Angeles—Phoenix 696 Miles

1st	Oldfield	Equipped with Firestone Tires
2nd	Nikrent	Equipped with Firestone Tires
3rd	Beaudet	Equipped with Firestone Tires

El Paso—Phoenix Race 533 Miles

1st	Miller	Equipped with Firestone Tires

At Phoenix the next day all cars that finished in both races entered in a track race where all the honors were also won on Firestone Tires.

These victories are but the climax of fifteen years of leadership. Think what this means to you. It means Strength and Endurance to meet all emergencies.

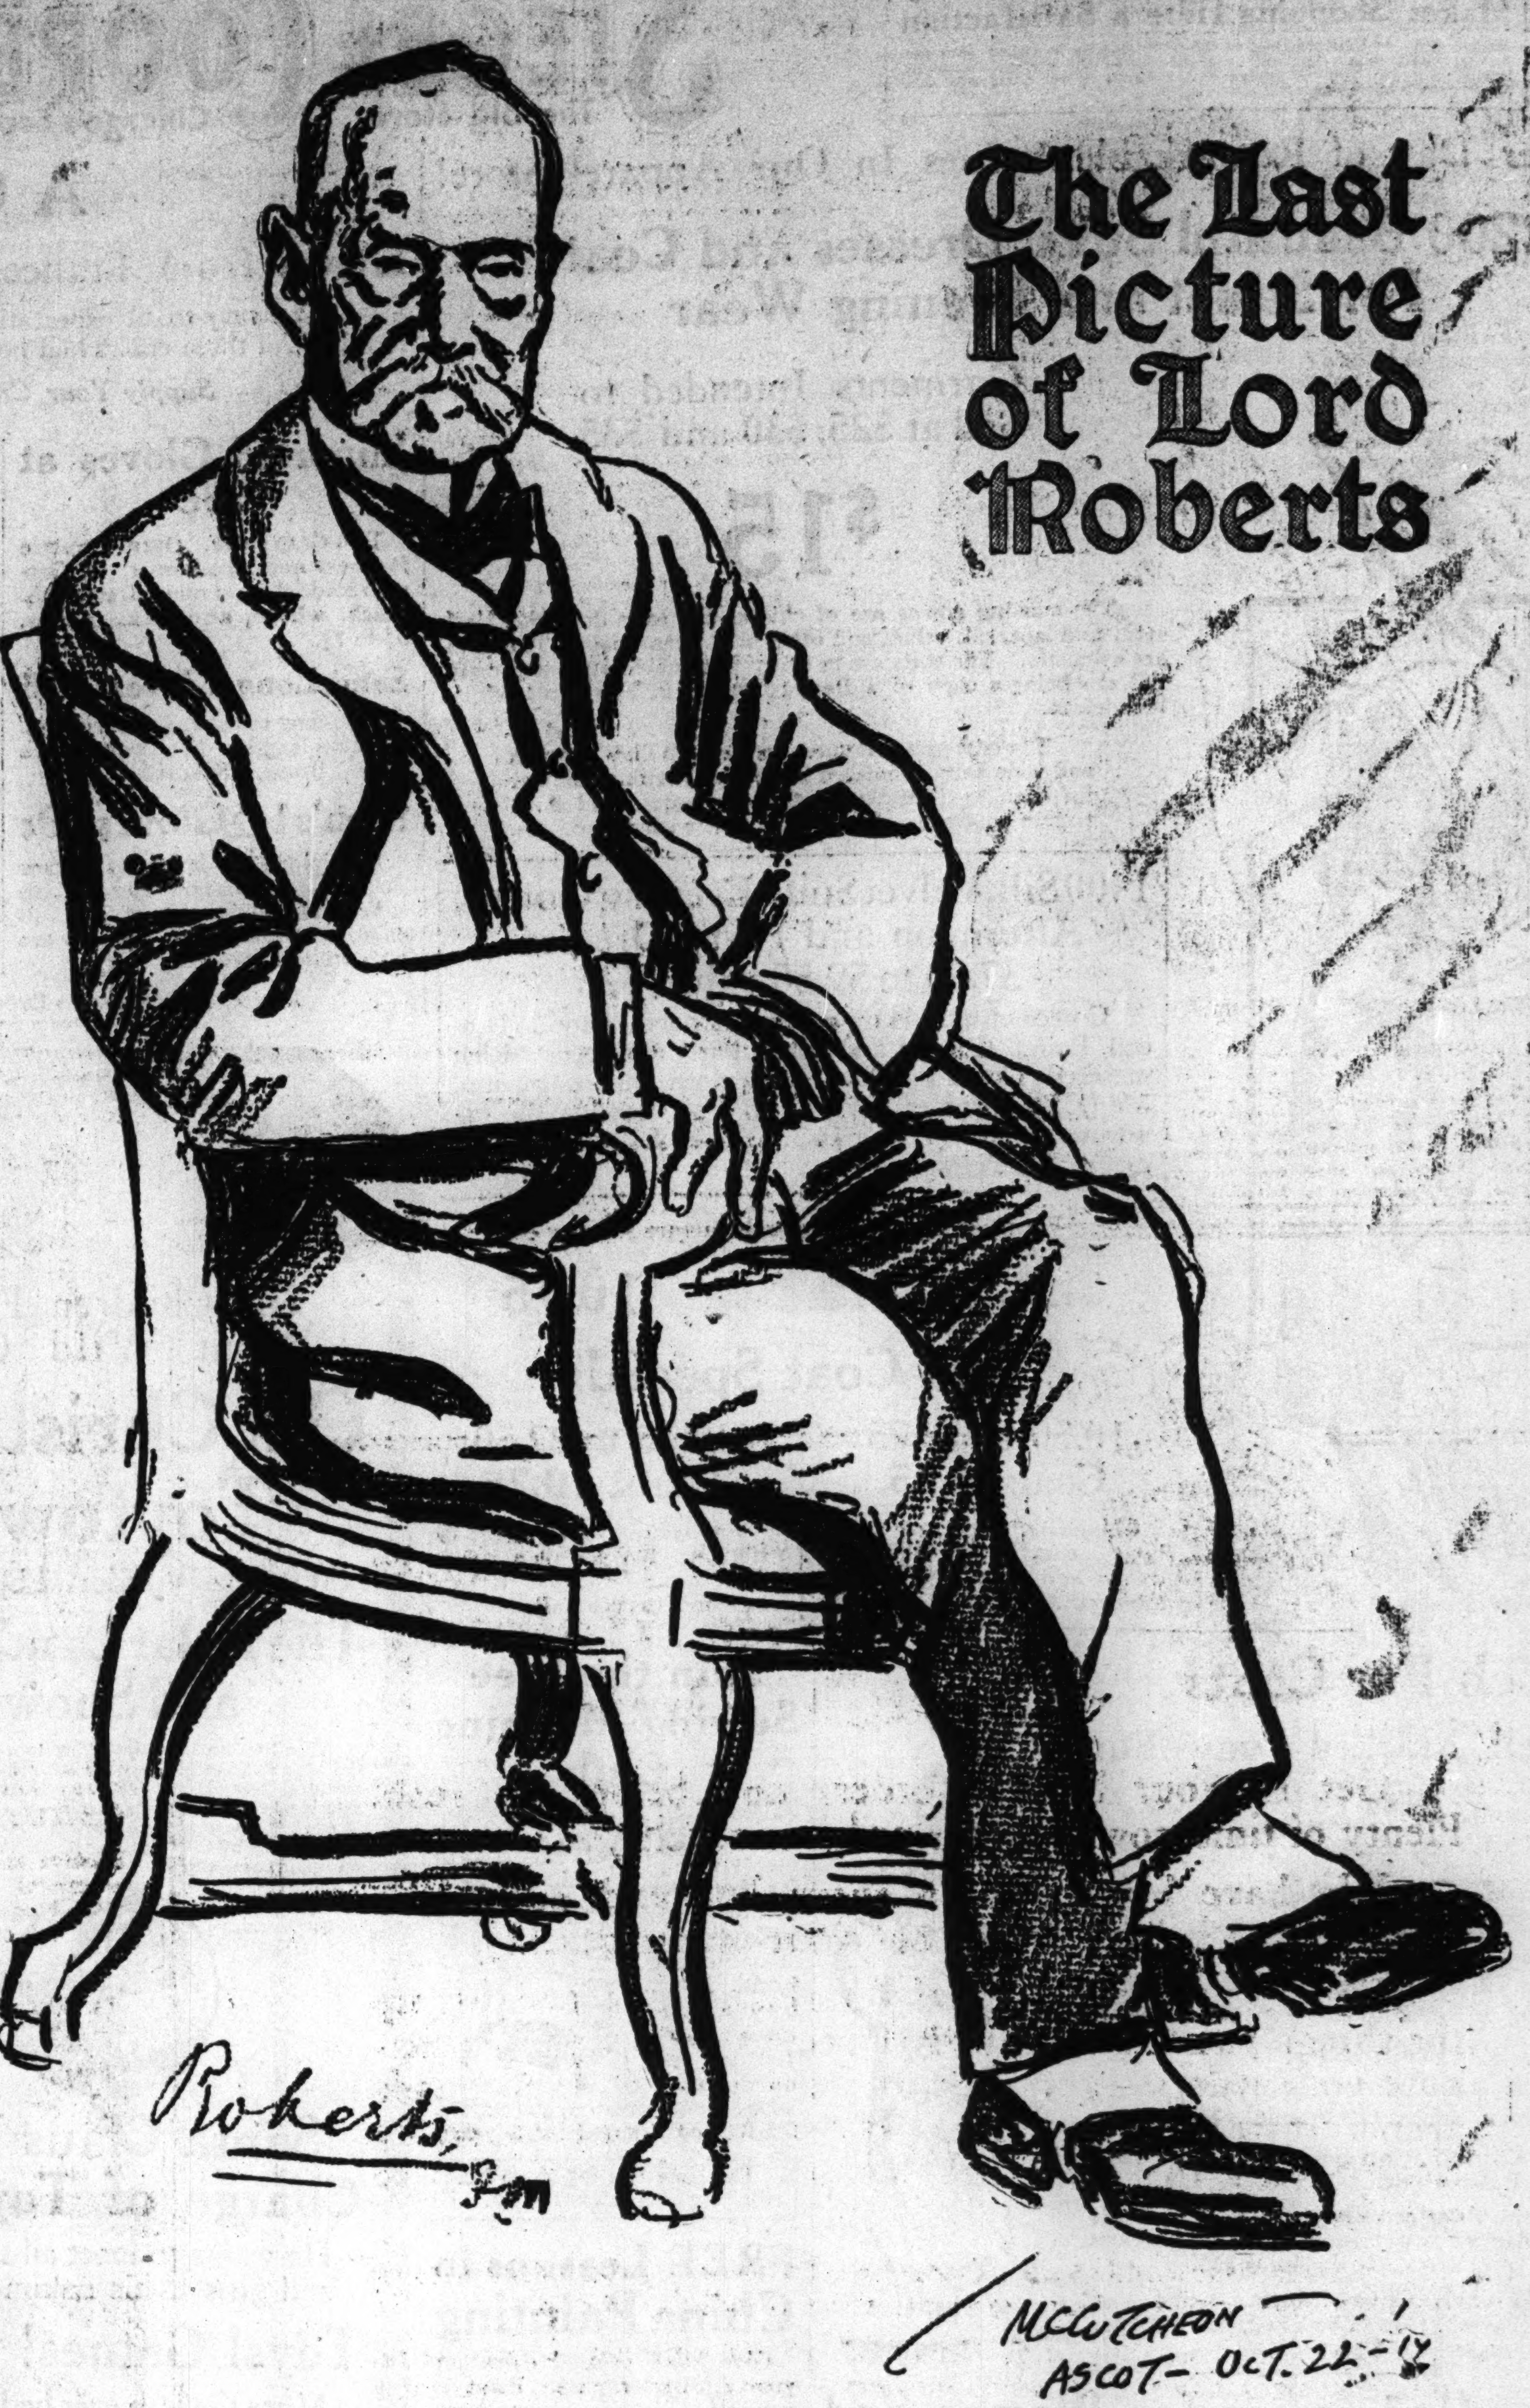
The Last Picture of Lord Roberts



DRAWN FROM LIFE BY JOHN T. McCUTCHEON FOR THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

While in England, en route home from the war, Mr. McCutcheon was the luncheon guest of "Bobs." At that time—Oct. 22—the artist drew the above picture for The Chicago Tribune, which Lord Roberts signed.

The Tribune has had a large supply of these pictures, of the same size as above, printed in black on white and in maroon on buff, on heavy book paper, suitable for framing.

The Tribune will mail a copy of the picture in either black and white or color to any part of the United States or Canada upon the receipt of 6 cents to cover costs. Address The Tribune, Chicago.

That's why we feel some of the pains of the ghastly conflict over there.

But we'll find the proper medicine for our end of the ailment. Work will cure us—a simple mixture of common sense and courage will soon restore us to health.

Our heaviest wounds are in the imagination.

A good many financiers, a sprinkling of retailers, a handful of manufacturers are paying a fiddler whose music they detest; but all told the lot of 'em don't amount to one per cent of our population or institutions.

As a whole we simply must benefit from the situation.

For a long while to come the universe will look to us to supply its chief necessities.

All trades won't be active, but there'll be such a tremendous growth in general that everybody will get an opportunity to find occupation at good wages.

Our chief problem is one of readjustment.

When we accommodate ourselves to the new order of things, America will be in a healthier and sounder condition than ever before.

There never was a year when we had more reason to thank Providence for his bounties.

We have been spared from the heaviest single blow Destiny has yet delivered humanity.

We have been blessed with peace, protection, and prosperity.

Are we giving our share, then, if we give only thanks?

There are millions of kinsfolk over yonder, bereft of support, stricken alike with grief and privation.

War has harvested Europe's crop of manhood and death is gleaning clean the stubble.

For three million square miles women and children are in abject need.

Whatever the merits of the cause to uphold which their men have exposed them to tribulation, these innocents are utterly resourceless.

Come, Neighbor, and do your duty; the least of us can afford to help a little bit.

Thanks giving isn't enough this year.

Uncle Sam Sends His Soldiers and Sailors

To the Hot Springs of Arkansas, for the Relief and Cure of Rheumatism and Blood Disorders.

(See List Below.)

The great Army and Navy Hospital, located here, reports ninety per cent of its patients as being returned to duty. This is a fair indication of the certainty of cure or relief that sufferers may expect.

Many years ago, when Thomas Jefferson was President, the U. S. Government awakened to the fact that the Hot Springs of Arkansas was the most valuable asset in America for the curing of human ailments. So all of these springs were set aside and became a park reserve, under the direct control and supervision of the Government.

It is beyond comprehension the thousands upon thousands of lives that have since been saved through the healing powers of these springs.

The waters are so charged with radium—known technically as radioactivity—that they accomplish results in the cure of disease that would under other treatment be considered impossible.

The ailments that most readily yield to these baths are Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Malaria, Locomotor Ataxia [earlier stages], Bright's Disease [when not too far advanced], Liver and Bladder troubles, Catarrhal troubles, Skin and Blood diseases, troubles peculiar to women, and other troubles of a nature kindred to those above mentioned.

Regarding these springs as America's greatest gift to the sick, the Government has never allowed them to be exploited for private gain. The prices charged for the baths are strictly regulated—hotel charges are extremely low—and every consideration is afforded the visitor.

The city of Hot Springs is one of the most delightful resorts to be found anywhere in the world, and its visitors are by no means confined to those seeking health.

The best of hotel accommodations, ideal climate the year around, picturesque mountain scenery with drives made beautiful by U. S. expert engineers, all contribute to make this the ideal resort of America.

Splendid facilities for all outdoor sports, excellent tennis courts, one of the finest 18-hole golf courses in America, Base Ball Parks, etc.—lively with the gaiety of thousands of visitors from all parts of the country—Hot Springs offers rest, comfort, enjoyment and health.

This will enable the supplying of a private bathroom with hot and cold salt and fresh water with every room, and for these bathrooms no extra charge will be made during the Fall and Winter Season.

The house occupies two blocks of ocean front, and its heated parlor solariums overlooking the Boardwalk and the sunny south ocean exposure are most attractive. Exquisite music every evening throughout the year.

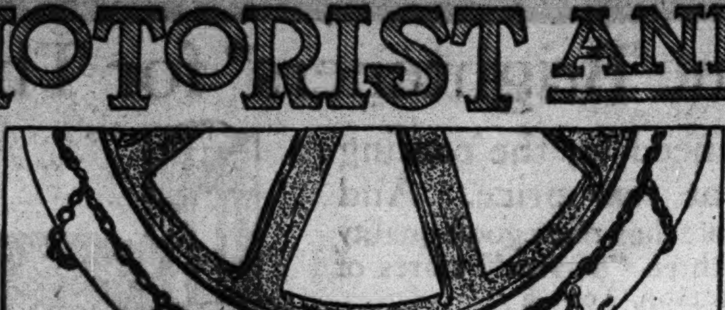
FOR MOTORIST AND MOTORCYCLIST

By Hugh



TIRE CHAINS SHOULD BE FITTED RATHER LOOSELY TO AVOID DAMAGING THE CASING.

CONCERNING SKIDDING.

BEFORE many weeks have passed the city motorist will begin using anti-skid chains on his wheels in order to make his way with safety through the snow or over the icy pavements. Not all motorists use chains, depending upon anti-skid tires entirely—and there are others who can and do drive without much trouble even with smooth tread tires.

It is not a difficult proposition to do this, but the car must be kept going when snow is encountered, else the wheels will merely rotate and the car will stand still. The chief trouble comes when a rear wheel settles in a little pocket, and then it is almost impossible to move the car.

In fitting tire chains, see that they are comparatively loose. So long as they cannot work off there will not be too much play, unless they are so loose as to strike against the fenders, making a disagreeable noise and gradually cutting through the metal and ruining the guards over the wheels.

As a cross chain breaks and hits the fenders the motorist should immediately stop his car and with a pair of pliers remove the broken parts, replacing them with a new cross link when he returns home. These cross chains may be secured in automobile supply houses, so it is not necessary to throw away a good chain because a few cross members have been worn out, because it is only a moment's work to make the replacement.

After it has been raining and the temperature suddenly drops during the night trouble may arise from the fact that water that has accumulated around the brakes freezes, if the car is kept in a cold place. The result is that something is apt to snap when the attempt is made to start in the morning. Under such circumstances try to move the car by hand, and if it is found frozen pour hot water over the brakes to thaw them out and thus prevent a possible breakdown. It is well where a car has been in a cold place all night to be very careful about starting up in the morning, avoiding the sudden application of power in order to prevent some part giving way, for cold metal will snap easily, as is well known.

Queries and Answers.

"Wishing to drive through from Goshen, Ind., to Pontiac, Mich., in an automobile, please advise me through THE TRIBUNE the best road to be taken.

"M. E. P., Goshen, Ind."

There are three routes and there is little choice. The one through Coldwater is a few miles shorter but because of the fact that the South Bend-Detroit route is more traveled it would be better to go this way at this time of the year. It will not be necessary to go to South Bend, however. There is probably a direct road from Goshen to Bristol, a few miles north. From Bristol it is forty-eight miles to Kalamazoo, by way of White Pigeon, Three Rivers, and Schoolcraft. At Kalamazoo, the South Bend-Detroit road is taken through Battle Creek, Marshall, Albion, and Jackton to Ann Arbor, this distance being 102 miles. Then strike north to Brighton, eighteen miles; east to New Hudson, nine miles, and then fork left to Pontiac, twenty miles, making the total distance 197 miles. The road between Kalamazoo and Ann Arbor is well marked and is usually in good condition.

"Contemplating making a trip from Chicago to Mobile, Ala., can you give me information as to the condition of the roads, the best route, giving the chief cities through which I will pass. Any information will be greatly appreciated.

"J. M. L., South Chicago."

In THE TRIBUNE of Oct. 11 a route by way of Pittsburgh, Hagerstown, Roanoke, Columbia, etc., was given, with an alternative route through Indianapolis, Louisville, Nashville, and Atlanta. The Chattanooga Automobile club says the latter route is preferred, as it is 217 miles shorter, passes through historic country, and that for the most part the roads are good, as described in THE TRIBUNE of Nov. 1. This route would be through Hammond, Crown Point, Rensselaer, Remington, Lafayette, Frankfort, and Kirklin to Indianapolis, 205 miles. Then the route is to Louisville by way of Columbus and Seymour, adding 125 miles. The road from Louisville to Nashville is through Buffalo, Hardyville, Bear Wallow, Glasgow, Scottsville, and Gallatin and is 200 miles. From this point the road is directly south through Decatur and Birmingham to Atlanta. Then a westerly course is taken through Selma and southeasterly to Thomasville. Here a turn south is again taken through Grove Hill and straight to Mobile.

"Please give me in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE the best route from Joliet, Ill., to Neenah, Wis., together with number of miles. M. F., Joliet."

Lt will be best to go directly to Chicago and make your trip start from that point. As good a route as any is along the lake shore to Milwaukee, passing through Waukegan, Kenosha and Racine. From Milwaukee branch northwesterly to Fond du Lac and Oshkosh and from Oshkosh to Neenah it is a matter of only fifteen miles. The distance from Joliet to Chicago is forty miles; from Chicago to Milwaukee, ninety miles; from Milwaukee to Oshkosh, eighty-one miles, and from Oshkosh to Neenah, fifteen miles, or a total of 226 miles. If desired you could go straight to Aurora and then along the Fox river as far as McHenry, branching off here to Lake Geneva. There is a direct road north from Lake Geneva through Eagle and Oconomowoc to Mayville. At this point you turn east to Theresa and then straight to Fond du Lac. You would undoubtedly avoid considerable traffic and would probably save a little in distance.

"Can you direct me over a good automobile road to Waveland, Ind., and state how far it is from Chicago? I wish to strike La Porte either going or coming. The route from La Porte will do, as I am familiar (thanks to THE TRIBUNE) with the directions into Chicago. Waveland has a scenic spot called "Shades of Death," which we wish to visit.

"F. J. P., La Porte, Ind."

Because of the fact that Waveland is in the extreme western part of the state of Indiana, almost opposite Indianapolis, it will be best to follow the Lincoln highway directly west to Merrillsville, and then strike south through Crown Point, Thayer, Rensselaer and the regular Chicago-Indianapolis road into Lafayette. From Lafayette there is a splendid road directly south to Crawfordsville and there is undoubtedly a good highway from Crawfordsville to Waveland, although THE TRIBUNE has no record of it.

"Will you please give me at your earliest convenience the best and most direct route from Chicago to Dubuque, Ia., and state if the roads are marked. What is the distance, please?

"P. H. McG., Chicago."

The road is from Chicago through Elgin, Marengo, and Belvidere to Rockford, eighty-eight miles. Then you go through Freeport, Shullsburg, and Hazel Green to Dubuque, an additional ninety-five miles. The road is not marked except in spots and is not in good shape at present.

"Referring to the route from Chicago to St. Joseph, Mich., by way of New Buffalo, Bridgman, and Stevensville, I beg leave to say I have just driven over a better route. Go from New Buffalo straight east on a new stone road all the way to Galien; then go north, following the Blue Book route to Stevensville.

"W. C. B., Hammond, Ind."

The attention of Thomas A. Flynn is called to this route. The road past New Buffalo to Galien is ideal; in fact, it makes a hard road all the way from Chicago. It is twenty-five miles from Galien to St. Joseph, and excepting the first six miles the road is frequently bad, being of sand in many places and clay in others; it is not a good road is dry or wet weather, although not impassable at any time.

"Can you instruct me how to keep the water in my battery from freezing—I mean the distilled water that is used in the starting and lighting system? Also how to keep the water in the radiator from freezing?

"R. V. HARRIS, Mason City, Ia."

Do not add water to a storage battery except just before it is placed on charge. The water will not mix with the acid except when boiling from the charge; then it will mix readily and cannot freeze. If the water is added when cold at any other time it will merely remain on top of the solution and will then freeze and break the jars. Directions for preventing water from freezing in the radiator were published in THE TRIBUNE of Oct. 18. Use denatured alcohol with the water. A solution of 10 per cent alcohol will freeze at 30 degrees, 20 per cent at 10 degrees, 30 percent at 5 degrees below zero, 40 per cent at 20 below, and 50 per cent at 35 below.

"I was surprised to read in THE TRIBUNE the route from Chicago to Janesville in answer to an inquiry by J. H. M. You have given him the longest and one of the poorest routes between Elgin and Janesville. The road is poor a good deal of the way. A shorter and better route is as follows: Elgin to Huntley, fourteen; Huntley to Woodstock, eleven; Woodstock to Harvard, thirteen; Harvard to Walworth, seven; Walworth to Janesville, twenty-six, or a total of seventy-one miles. Almost all of this is good hard gravel. Please give this route to J. H. M., for I am sure he will appreciate it. I have been over both roads.

"H. E. R., Janesville, Wis."

THE TRIBUNE was well aware of the bad road conditions east of Belvidere, but that between Woodstock and Harvard has been most miserable, unless improved within the last season. It was largely dirt and the writer has had difficulty in getting through in wet weather.

"Please give me in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE the best route from Mount Carroll, Ill., to Wheaton, Ill., and from Mount Carroll to Champaign, Ill.

"READER, Mount Carroll, Ill."

From Mount Carroll go directly south to Clinton, a matter of twenty-six miles, and then follow the Lincoln highway directly east to Geneva, which is 111 miles farther. From Geneva continue straight east across the Fox river to West Chicago and here branch off southeasterly into Wheaton, which is ten miles from Geneva, making 147 miles. To reach Champaign you can go to Geneva and follow the Lincoln highway through Aurora to Joliet and then branch off southeasterly to Kankakee and follow the Illinois Central railroad through Gilman and Paxton to Champaign. A direct route from Clinton, Ia., to Champaign would be to Sterling, Princeton, Peoria, Bloomington and Champaign.

"As a reader of your motorists' department I would like you to publish the route from Chicago to Buffalo and give the general conditions of the roads and state the points through which one will pass. T. F. D., Milwaukee, Wis."

Details of the Chicago-Buffalo route were published a few weeks ago. The road is through South Chicago, Hammond, Valparaiso, South Bend, Ligonier, Kendallville, Archbold, Napoleon, Bowling Green, Clyde, Elyria, Cleveland, and Erie to Buffalo and are good all the way.

"Please publish in THE TRIBUNE an automobile route from Rochelle, Ill., to Mount Pleasant, Ia., and state the road conditions. M. M. N., Chicago."

Rochelle to Mendota, Princeton, Sheffield, Kewanee, Galva, Galesburg, Monmouth, Burlington, New London, and Mount Pleasant. The roads are good all the way through Illinois, but THE TRIBUNE cannot advise as to the road from Burlington to the destination.

"Will you please inform me through the columns of THE TRIBUNE the best automobile route from Fort Madison, and also from Keokuk, Ia., to Indianapolis, Ind., by way of Quincy, Ill.?

"D. H. PAYNE, Bloomfield, Ia."

In each case follow the road on the east bank of the Mississippi river to Quincy and then take the road through Rushville and Frederic, cross the Illinois river to Beardstown, and east to Virginia. There is some sand east of the river. From Virginia go south to Jacksonville, then east to Springfield and Decatur. It will pay to go north to Maroa, then east to Champaign, Danville, Covington, Veedersburg, and Crawfordsville to Indianapolis. The roads are good most all the way except that mentioned. A shorter route from Decatur would be through Arcola to Terre Haute and direct to Indianapolis, but the road is not so good.

"Please send me an automobile road guide for Illinois.

"A. A. H., Loda, Ill."

THE TRIBUNE does not publish road guides, nor have them for sale. It attempts to answer questions regarding routes, but the reader will have to secure road maps from some of the automobile supply houses or book stores which carry both the Automobile Blue Book and King's guides.

"I am planning a trip to Elgin, Ill., from Carbondale, Ill., in an automobile and would appreciate advice as to the best route to take, what kind of roads I am liable to encounter, how far it is, and through what cities I will pass.

"R. M. R., Anna, Ill."

It will be safer to go by way of St. Louis, but at best you will find [illegible] different roads from Carbondale to St. Louis, as few southern Illinois roads are of the improved sort. THE TRIBUNE has no data on the road from Carbondale to Murphysboro, but as it is only a short distance any automobile owner can give directions. From Murphysboro take the road through Vergennes, Pinckneyville, Coulterville, Marissa, Old Town, New Athens, Freeburg, and Belleville to East St. Louis, a distance of a little over ninety miles. It will not be necessary to go into St. Louis unless desired. The road from East St. Louis is though Edwardsville and Litchfield to Springfield, a distance of 105 miles. Then follow the main road through Lincoln and Atlanta to Bloomington, seventy-five miles. You can now strike directly north through Normal, El Paso, and Minonk to Wenona, forty-two miles. Then go east to Streator and you are on fine gravel roads. From Streator it is sixteen miles to Ottawa, where you can pick up the Starved Rock trail, which is marked, and follow this to Aurora, forty-five miles. Now take the road along the Fox river to Elgin, which is twenty-two miles. The entire distance is about 400 miles.

"A few Sundays ago you had an excellent article with a map from Chicago to South Bend, Ind. I want to run my car from Chicago to Cincinnati and would appreciate an article showing the best route from South Bend to that point, or the best route from Chicago to Cincinnati, mentioning the good hotels en route for a slow driver making 100 miles a day.

"H F. OLMSTED, Chicago."

You will save forty miles by going to Indianapolis by way of Hammond, Crown Point, Rensselaer, Remington, Lafayette, Frankfort, and Kirklin. It is not a hard route to find, for it is marked after the Kankakee river at Thayer is crossed. From Indianapolis the road is simple, being by way of Shelbyville, Greensburg, and Lawrenceburg. Better roads from Indianapolis to Cincinnati will be found through Greenfield, Richmond, Eaton, and Hamilton, however, although the distance is greater. You will find fair accommodations at Renesselaer, and of course the best hotels at Indianapolis. If you go by way of South Bend stop there or at Logansport for the night.

"Please give me the best road from Grand Rapids, Mich., to Chicago. Also please state in what condition the road will be after a rain. Is there any clay to amount to anything, and how is the road out of Laporte?

"P. A. V., Oak Park, Ill."

It will be better to leave out South Bend and Laporte until the road improvements between these points have been completed. Besides, it is shorter to branch off at Niles and go through Hudson Lake. Leave Grand Rapids on Division street, going south through Plainwell, Kalamazoo, Paw Paw, Dowagiac, Pokagon, and Summerville to Niles. At Fourth and Main streets turn off southwesterly to Hudson Lake, meeting the Michigan City road. Then take the road through Chesterton, Gary, Tolleston, Hessville, East Chicago, Whiting, and South Chicago. From Grand Rapids to Niles it is 107 miles; Hudson Lake, 125; Michigan City, 136; Chesterton, 151; Gary, 170; East Chicago, 181; Chicago, 202. This is a good road all the way and even in wet weather there is no danger. The road east of Laporte is to be avoided.

"A regular reader of THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE, I note you quoted the Automobile Blue Book in your quesries and answers column, recommending the route via Pittsburgh in touring from Chicago to Florida points in preference to the route via Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Atlanta. While, of course it is our duty to first convince the Automobile Blue Book which you quote as an authority of the superior features of the Chattanooga route, we would appreciate it very much if you would kindly make reference to them in your columns.

"The Chattanooga route, as you state, is 260 miles shorter. It possesses many more scenic and historical attractions and gives the tourist a more intimate insight in the commercial, industrial, and agricultural development of the new progressive southland. It enables tourists to view the wonderful blue grass countries of Kentucky around Louisville and of Tennessee around Nashville; to visit Mammoth cave, to make a pilgrimage by a slight detour to the birthplace of Lincoln, to inspect the historic battlefields of Nashville, Murfreesboro, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Signal Mountain, and Atlanta, and travel along the road used by Sherman in his march to the sea. It provides the tourist with an opportunity to mark the wonderful commercial and industrial progress of Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga, Atlanta, and Macon.

"On the Chattanooga route the roads, as you know, from Chicago through Indianapolis to Louisville are excellent. Traveling along the old Louisville and Nashville pike, built before the war there are many miles of as fine road as one would wish to encounter, while the stretches of rough road represent a small percentage of the total mileage and are not too difficult for the ordinary car to negotiate. From Nashville to Chattanooga there is only a stretch of about ten miles which is really severe. Cumberland mountain is crossed by toll roads up and down the mountain, the proceeds of which go entirely toward maintaining the roads in good condition. For many miles leading into the two terminal cities of Nashville and Chattanooga excellent pike roads are provided. From Chattanooga to Atlanta the entire road is in excellent condition, as Chattanoogans frequently run down to Atlanta in the morning and back in the evening.

"Plans are under way for the permanent improvement of the Nashville to Chattanooga road. For the benefit of the delegates to the fourth American road congress in Atlanta, at the instance of the Chattanooga Automobile club, trucks will be sent out from Chattanooga and Nashville within the next ten days and forces of men headed by prominent business men of the two cities will work this bad stretch in the road, making temporary repairs so that the tourists can travel over it in comfort.

"Tourists tell us the many attractions of the Chattanooga route amply warrant any one in choosing this route.

"V. D. L. ROBINSON,
"Secretary Chattanooga Automobile club, Chattanooga, Tenn."

"Please publish in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE the best automobile route from Fort Wayne, Ind., to Bay City, Mich., and state if possible the road conditions.

"S. K. B., Fort Wayne, Ind."

Fort Wayne north through Kendallville, Howe, and Sturgis to Kalamazoo; Kalamazoo to Battle Creek, Lansing, and St. Johns; then east to Owosso, and north through Saginaw to Bay City. The roads are good as far as Lansing, but beyond that point some sand will be found.

Inquiries concerning motorists, motorcyclists, etc., will be answered. Address letters to "High Speed," care of "The Chicago Sunday Tribune."

Answer to Puzzle.

All of the pictorial rebuses contained in that odd collection of labels from the corner grocery shop were mastered by our clever puzzlists, although some of them proved to be pretty hard nuts to crack. The following are the words, given in their regular order: Cabbages, beets, berries, tar, borax, thyme, sage, tomatoes, currants, blacking, pears, raisins, turnips, coal and wood, mixed teas, condensed milk, dates, butter, candies, candles, canned peas, pickles, matches, catsup, molasses, flour, Indian and rye meals, farina, and carpet tacks.

Here's the Reason Why the New

Marmon "41"

Causes Us to Offer Used Cars at Prices

From $250 Up

Why can we offer the greatest bargains in used cars that Chicago has ever known? Here's the answer—

The new MARMON "Forty-One" has made such a wonderful success that owners of older Marmons as well as other cars have exchanged their cars for this truly extraordinary car.

Most of the buyers of new cars today have older cars to exchange. The rapid sales of any successful car must mean the accumulation of many used cars.

We must move used cars quickly to take care of those we are receiving in exchange.

You reap the benefit—such automobile values and such prices were never before offered.

Greater Value Than Any New Car at Equal Price

Before you buy any new car—priced from $400 to $1500—come in and judge these values by comparison.

The used car gives you greater carrying capacity—more power—easier riding qualities—greater all 'round capability and value.

We are ready to prove to you that any of these used cars offered at these wonderfully low figures are better by far than any new car you can buy at such prices.

Today ushers in some special bargains no wise buyer can afford to overlook.

So will every ensuing morning until the supply of used cars grows smaller.

Come and see them. Look them over. Examine every detail. Ride in them. Drive them. But don't wait until somebody else has just what you want to invest for the car you want. Act now!

Just one more word—perhaps you are not interested in "used cars"—perhaps you want a new car that will prove better by performance than any other automobile you ever owned new or rode in. If so, ask to see the new Marmon "41"—and—MAKE US PROVE IT.

The LOVE AFFAIRS of PEGGY

[Copyright: 1914: By The Tribune Company.]

Dear little Peggy! With all her light heartedness and fun she finds, like the rest of us, Sorrow lurks just around the corner. As a "Peggy of the Films" who, we wonder, could portray her in her sadder, more tender moods? Whom would you suggest?

Peggy, who art thou?

JOURNAL, how can I write what I'm going to! It's such a little, little time since I was confiding in you everything about my wedding. And, O, journal—I wasn't being nice to Elliott! I was bossing and fussing at him because he wouldn't enter into the spirit of my way of being married. And now—I can never, never marry him at all, for his automobile went over a bank and his head was hurt so that the doctors say he'll never be—right—again. Of course, sometimes doctors make mistakes, but, anyway, he's terribly ill and I can't be married—at least for a long, long time.

I'm sitting here all alone in my room. Such a different looking room from what it was a week ago. Then it was all strewn with things for the wedding and what the girls gave me at the showers. Every vase was filled with flowers Elliott had sent me, and other reminders of his love and thoughtfulness were everywhere.

Now the room is all orderly and quiet. The vases are empty, for Elliott doesn't know there are such things as vases, and nobody else has thought to fill them—or if they have they wouldn't dare, for they know how I would feel to see somebody else's flowers in them.

Last week the girls were running in and out, and I myself was on the go most of the time. Dressing and going and resting—with not much time for Elliott. And that was why he was grouchy and why I acted like a tyrannical little cat. O, it's the most terrible thing in the world to look back and regret the way you've acted toward somebody who will never, never have a chance to see you act any differently. Just think, all my wishing and praying and crying will never be able to get back my telling Elliott he was pig-headed!

When I heard about Elliott I had just come back from an afternoon party. O, the gorgeousest party you ever heard of! I tore up to mother's room to tell her about it. She's always so interested in what I do, and of course is especially so since I've been engaged. She listened to me and laughed with me and we were having a beautiful time when the door bell rang. I jumped up.

"It's probably Elliott—he said he might come to dinner," I said, and I flew to open the door, terribly anxious to see him, for I hadn't had a sight of him since the night before. But it wasn't Elliott. It was his married sister. And she stepped into the hall, not seeing my outstretched hands. She just looked at me and as I looked back at her I saw that her face was terrible and my smile simply froze on my lips.

I know that I was still smiling when she said huskily, "Peggy!" But I couldn't answer her.

Suddenly she turned, went past me and up the stairs. I heard her go into mother's room without knocking and shut and lock the door after her. I just stood stock still, with that awful feeling you get when something terrible is going to happen. Pretty soon I crept up the stairs. I went into my own room, and there in all my party clothes I sat down on the floor and waited.

How long I sat there I don't know, but after a while I heard mother come softly and slowly down the hall. She stopped at my door and paused a moment before she knocked. Then she rapped hesitatingly.

"Come in," I said dully. And she came in, bent over, and took me in her arms as if I were a baby and sitting down with me in the rocker, put her face against mine and rocked unsteadily. The cheek against mine was wet. I sat up after a minute.

"What is it, mother?" I asked. "Please tell me quickly or I'll go crazy."

She said, "Elliott—" and then burst out sobbing against my shoulder. But I couldn't cry. I had to find out. I shook her a little.

"Is he—dead?" She shook her head.

We sat there silent for several seconds. Then she told me. Elliott had just left the office to come to our house. As he was about to cross the bridge something had gone wrong with the steering wheel—he had been unable to control the car and it had gone over the bank. He had been thrown clear of the car, but his head had struck the piling and—and, what I've just told you!

I've been to see him every day at the hospital. He looks the same as ever and smiles when I come in—but he doesn't know me. O, journal, he doesn't know me—and a week ago I was the dearest thing on earth to him! I take his hand and he lets me hold it. When I speak he answers me, yes or no—but with a terrible politeness and that awful vague look in his eyes.

I can hardly bear it. Sometimes, just to relax, I close my eyes and make believe I'm dreaming. I say to myself as one does when having an especially bad dream, "I'm so glad this isn't true. Won't I be glad when I wake up!" But I don't know whether it helps or not, because all the time I'm pretending I know it is so and that all the going to sleep and waking up in the world won't make it not so.

Last week I was Peggy. Happy, carefree, reckless, selfish Peggy. Now—I'm still Peggy—but such a different one! Mother called me Margaret this morning without thinking and then caught herself and bit her lip.

I wonder, journal, what the world holds for me now? I wonder what tales you'll tell about Peggy after this tragedy! Whatever they are hold, fast locked, my secrets. Please, O please, journal o' mine!

ONCE upon a time there was a FOOLISH PERSON with a wonderful IDEA in his head. He wanted to make a motion picture play of it, but felt that he was not UP in scenario writing. Said the FOOLISH PERSON: "'Cutouts' and 'fadeouts' are beyond my KEN. If I could just put my idea in story form and submit it I could do that easily. But this, it seems, is not what the film companies want. So my IDEA must rest in the oblivion of my brain."

But one SUNDAY MORNING his eyes rested on an announcement in a Sunday paper. Here is what it said:

Five hundred dollars in prizes will be paid on Monday, Feb. 1, 1915, for the best three two reel dramatic or melodramatic scenarios offered in a contest conducted by this paper in conjunction with the Essanay Film Manufacturing company. The prizes will rank as follows:

First prize, $250.

Second prize, $150.

Third prize, $100.

Following are the conditions governing the contest:

Scenarios submitted must consist of neither more nor less than two reels; the plots must be either dramatic or melodramatic. Comedies, either straight, farce, slapstick, or burlesque, will not be considered.

Scenarios must be either typewritten or written in pen and ink and on one side of the paper only.

Don't worry about putting your ideas in scenario form. What we want is IDEAS! ORIGINALITY!

The name of the author must not appear on the scenarios. The author will write his or her name on a slip of paper, together with his address and the title of his manuscript. The slip of paper, with postage for return of scenario if unavailable, must be inclosed in a plain sealed envelope. The scenario and envelope must then be placed together in an envelope for mailing.

Address offerings to CONTEST EDITOR, "RIGHT OFF THE REEL" PAGE, care of this paper.

Upon receipt, scenarios and envelopes will receive corresponding numbers and be filed. The names of contributors will not be known until the judges have decided on the scenarios they consider most deserving of award.

No one in any way connected with either the Essanay company or this paper is eligible to compete.

A board of three judges, consisting of Francis X. Bushman of the Essanay company, Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, and Miss Kitty Kelly of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, will decide as to the merits of contributions.

All scenarios must be in by midnight of Saturday, Jan. 16, 1915. The names of the prize winners will be announced on Sunday, Jan. 31, 1915. The prize winning scenarios will be produced and featured by the Essanay company, which also reserves the right to buy at its usual rates such of the contributions submitted as it deems available for production.

"Aha!" said the FOOLISH PERSON, "here is my chance." So, merely glancing at the sentence which informed him where his IDEA was to be sent, he forthwith wrote his story; then, putting his name and address at the head, sent it in with a stamped and self addressed envelope for its return. Consequently—

IT WAS RETURNED IMMEDIATELY UPON BEING OPENED, because HE had not followed the CONDITIONS.

Upon receiving the CHILD of his BRAIN back again, he hunted up the paper and read through the announcement carefully. And again he submitted his manuscript as it should have been submitted in the first place.

MORAL: Save your time and ours by reading EVERY WORD of the CONDITIONS governing this CONTEST. We would much rather file your scenario than send it back, but IF YOUR NAME APPEARS in any way, you leave us no alternative.

Here's the way to write your story:

Elizabeth and her chum, Marion, tiring of a humdrum life in which nothing of interest has occurred for a long time, decide to adopt gypsies' clothes, run away from boarding school, and seek adventures. They are successful in getting away and are enjoying themselves hugely wandering through the beautiful countryside until suddenly they come upon a band of gypsies. The gypsies allow them to join the camp. During the night the girls hear them plotting to kidnap the child of a rich and unhappy widow. They decide to warn her and slip away. The gypsies, becoming aware of their absence and suspecting them of being spies, start in pursuit.

And so on—finish your story and send it in, but—

DON'T BE A FOOLISH PERSON.

Bessie Learn

YOUR votes have elected Miss Bessie Learn of the Edison company to honor the "Frame" this week. Miss Learn, who has been only with the Edison company during the two and one-half years she has graced the "movies," is an American. She was born in San Diego, Cal., on Aug. 30, 1892, and received her education in California and Chicago. She was on the stage for a long time, appearing in "Lovers' Lane," "The Little Princess," "Home Folks," with Annie Russell in "Midsummer Night's Dream," and with Robert Hilliard in vaudeville. She played stock in Brooklyn and Louisville and was with "Polly of the Circus." "My hobbies are sewing, driving my own car, and dancing," she says. "I love to read. Any good story appeals to me. I loved 'Pam' and 'The Girl of the Limberlost.'" Miss Learn is married, is not interested in suffrage, and believes in having a good time when she is not working. She is five feet tall, has brown hair and blue eyes, and weighs ninety-nine pounds.

Answers to Movie Fans. - - By Mae Tinee.

Owing to the number of queries received and the somewhat limited space allowed for answers, it is not always possible to print information as rapidly as the writers desire, as the letters must be answered in turn. All, however, receive careful attention.

When stamped and addressed envelopes are inclosed, Miss Tinee will be glad to answer personally any letters addressed to her. Address all queries to this department to Mae Tinee in care of this paper.

Questions that have been repeatedly answered will receive a reply only when a stamped and addressed envelope is sent.

Questions considered as ridiculous will not be answered.

Questions regarding relationship will be answered to the best of our knowledge, but we are not responsible if mistakes are made.

If you are interested in photo-play writing send a stamped and self-addressed envelope to this department for the information you desire.

MY. K. O. FAN (whatever that means): Some time when I am where Wallace Reid is, I'll ask him the questions you have put to me. Yes, I'd love to interview him. I have no information regarding the other two players you mention. Sorry.

B. V. D.: Aren't you chilly?

CURIOUS MAYE R.: Pearl White is not the wife of Chester Barnett. E. H. Calvert is the name of the man who acted with Ruth Stonehouse in "Her Trip to New York." No, he's not the lady's husband.

A. N. ADMIRER: Charles Clary and Wheeler Oakman are not married. Mary Fuller's eyes are hazel. Crane Wilbur lives in New York. No, you haven't tired me a bit.

M. C. L.: Francis Ford is 32 years old. I don't believe the "Lucille Love" series has as yet appeared in book form. If it has you ought to be able to obtain a copy at any book store or the book counter of any department store. Edwin August is not married. He lives in New York part of the time and makes California his home the rest. "The Million Dollar Mystery" has not appeared in book form as yet. You're welcome.

DOROTHY S.: James Morrison is not Dorothy Kelly's husband, for the very good reason that he is not married. Address her in care of the Vitagraph company, East Sixteenth street and Locust avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. You say you like her because you have never seen her dress outrageously nor smoke cigarets. I reckon you're a pretty nice person yourself, little 13 year old.

E. V. A.: I don't blame you a bit for having fallen in love with Florence La Badie. "Evvybody do." Regarding her financial affairs, however, I am unable to enlighten you. If ever she goes through your locality I have no doubt but that she would be delighted to meet you. It's kind of you to think of entertaining her, and I'm sure she'll be most appreciative.

R. A. M.: No, J. Warren Kerrigan is not married. He is in his early twenties. A letter addressed to him, in care of the Universal company, Hollywood, Cal., will reach him. I'm glad to be of service.

L. W. L.: Yes, Myrtle Stedman takes the lead in "Burning Daylight" and "Smoke Bellew."

SNOW-CRUZE FAN: Marguerite Snow will soon be seen in "Zudora." For information regarding this picture watch the paper. I have no information regarding the other actress you mention. Of course I'd like to oblige you, but I don't happen to have any snapshots around the office.

F. K.: Yes, Mary Pickford played in "Home Folks" while with the Biograph company.

FRIEND OF THE MOVIES: I'm sorry not to be able to gratify your wish, but I don't feel it would be right for me to tell right out in bold, black print who my favorites are. I agree with you that Kathlyn Williams and Maurice Costello are lovely—but then so are a lot of others. Let's just enjoy them all. Mary Pickford is married to Owen Moore. No, you're not a bit of trouble.

AIRETTA: Florence La Badie is 21 years old. She's not engaged that I know of, but then, gadzooks, you never can tell. No, Arthur Ashley is not married to Anita Stewart, nor is Miss Bessie Eyton married so far as I know. Ruth Stonehouse is not married to a "movie" actor. She is wedded to a scenario writer who is named Joe Roach. It is most certainly and decidedly not true that Francis Bushman is engaged to Beverly Bane. Put your mind at rest on that score. (I'm a regular church register, aren't I?) Of course your name is funny. Vurry.

A KELLY FAN: Dorothy Kelly is 20 years old. She was a designer and illustrator before she entered moving pictures. I have never heard that the other two players you mention are related to her. You think she'd make a good "Peggy." Well, who knows. She is a dear. James Morrison is only 25 years old. His ancestors were Dutch, English, and French, and—O joy!—he's not married. We can't understand how he's ever escaped, can we?

CURLY LOCKS: Norma Phillips is "Our Mutual Girl." Yes, Maym Kelso as the aunt is splendid. Thanks ever so much for what you say about my work. I'm so glad you like it.

ALWAYS THE SAME: Nobody home!

VICTOR S.: Nothing has happened to Anita Stewart, that I know of. No, I'm not a "mister." What wheeze do you refer to, sir?

MR. DOOLEY: How long has it taken you to grow so silly?

J. R. C.: Votes do not need necessarily to be written on the ballots. All right, "once and for all." Mark Pickford is married to Owen Moore. Of course, the actors and actresses take an interest in the "Frame." Wouldn't you if you thought you might wake up some Sunday morning and see your picture there?

FLOSSY: Actresses are paid according to what they are worth. You're welcome.

CURIOUS FRIEND: Opinions vary regarding Miss White. She says she is not married and I reckon she should know.

Marguerite Snow received the highest number of votes this week. Her picture, therefore, will appear in The Frame of Public Favor next Sunday. Of the other players voted upon the following six are the leaders: J. Warren Kerrigan, Paul Panzer, Wallace Reid, James Morrison, James Cruze, and Lila Chester.

While working in the Selig picture, "Unrest," Tom Santschi portrayed the part of a young man inclined to be "sporty" and a lover of automobile races. One of the scenes was supposed to show an automobile accident which would prevent Santschi, as the hero, from winning the race. It so happened that the motor car, which, by the way, was one of those decrepit vehicles which Mr. Santschi always insists on tinkering up, had been ineffectively repaired, so that during one of the most exciting parts of the race, and before the scenario required an accident, one of the front wheels came off, the automobile swerved into the ditch, and Santschi was precipitated in a parabolic curve far ahead of the machine and landed fortunately on a haycock. They had to repair "Tom" as well as the automobile before the picture making could be continued. However, the camera was working at the time, so the operator filmed the full effect of actual realism.

Anna Little had an awful scare one day. When Anna discovered her loss she posted back and wept bitter tears all over the war news and Harrison Fisher covers when the clerk said he had not seen the package. In the nick of time Mr. Proprietor returned and gave her her package and a lecture and told her the next time she sorrowed not to do it over perfectly good magazines.

She—Why, I think she is the happiest looking creature imaginable.

He—Well, I don't think any woman could look happy with as few clothes as she has.

The silence during the remainder of the picture was profound.

The Voice of the Movie Fan.

Dear Miss Tinee: I've just finished reading some of the remarks of the "movie fans," and two of them made me mad clean through. The two in question were "A Reader" and Mrs. Q. E. Waller. Mrs. Waller demands: "Cut the Peggy stuff out." I will admit Peggy is a trifle silly, but still it holds a good bit of humor. When people want diversion and amusement they turn to light and humorous things. I would advise Mrs. Waller to read Tolstoi and Poe; they are both nice and serious, and may meet Mrs. Waller's sense of humor.

Now about "Readers." So they think "you were charming, but now you are saucy and conceited. You had better tame down, or you will be minus a job." Well, well; the bold, naughty things. I think it would take a saucy person to deal with some persons; and you're not saucy; you're a dear. If they think they can oust people so easily they had better guess again—and guess quick. Mrs. Waller and "Readers" had better keep the new slogan, "Safety first," in mind and go slow. YOUR WARRIORESS.

Dear Miss Tinee: Has R. S. Travers nothing to say? Why does he not defend himself? Poor creature! This is indeed a cruel world to shatter his immortal ideals. I would speak personally to you, O fictitious one! You are not an adversary of the people in your immediate surroundings, perhaps, but their intimacy for you would be lost if they would but read your question and the answers to it in this paper. You, I presume, are absolutely opposed to slap-stick comedy, and such pictures as "Gardener's Hose" and "Misleading Miss" produced by Hepworth with little slap-stick would bring forth rollicking laughter from you. See these and if you are not for Keystone after that then there is no hope—absolutely.

My education permits me to say just so much and I find it pretty hard to express myself, but I'll challenge you or any one to witness "Dough and Dynamite," a two reel Keystone comedy, with Charles Chaplin (funnier than Bunny) and Chester Conklin (another best yet) without laughing—out loud! If I lose I agree to take everything back which I may have said and also to suffer the humility which I must endure if it happens to turn out not to my expectations.

It is not my motive to aggrandize the Keystone company, as it already is at the height of perfection, but I am trying to adumbrate you. Subsequently you will sit agape and marvel at the truth I am attempting to affect you and all others opposed to these wonderful comedies with. My advice to you is unauthoritative, but I am only writing this as others are, for you to see things as others do, not only as you see them.

FRED T. LEXIN JR.,
3645 Southport avenue, Chicago.

Dear Miss Tinee: I noticed recently in your "Voice of the Movie Fans" section in the paper that several correspondents have voiced their disgust of the Keystone comedies, claiming that they are degrading. One went so far as to say that he could not see how an intelligent audience could enjoy them. I don't agree with him. Besides enjoying the Keystone comedies, I and a lot of my friends make it a point to see every one that comes to town, especially those featuring Charlie Chapin or "Fatty." I think they should appeal to any one with a sense of humor. Mr. Chapin, "Fatty," and "Mabel," are, to my belief, the best comedians in their line on the movie stage. They never fail to draw a laugh, even from the most serious minded, and deserve some credit. If the program of a moving picture theater were to include plays of the serious type only the public would soon tire of them.

The Great Toy Store Is a Scene of Splendor

"Oo-oo-h! Look at it, mamma! Look at all the toys. Is this where Santa Claus lives?" exclaimed a little tot yesterday. "No, my dear," said the mother, "Santa doesn't really live here; he lives far away, but this is where he keeps his toys; isn't it beautiful?"

There was a suspicion of tears in the mother's eyes as she watched her round eyed little tot trying to absorb all the marvels that were unfolded before her dazzled gaze. There is a pathos in a joy so wonderful, in the innocent amazement that the little childish minds feel in this awe-inspiring place of old Kris Kringle.

Bring the little folks to see it. Let them talk to Santa and pick out the things they want him to bring. No matter what they choose, it won't cost much. Nothing costs so very much in this great Palace of Toys.

Arizona Farm Lands
FOR SALE

The celebrated Tucson Farms, near the city of Tucson, Ariz., are now for sale on the cash and easy payment plans. Farmers in the northern, middle, and middle western states who are living on one crop per year are earnestly advised to get in touch with our Chicago office and learn the details of the special excursion which will leave Chicago Dec. 1 at 8:05 p. m., on the Golden State Limited of the Rock Island railway.

Now that cold weather has set in it is an opportune time to visit Tucson farms and see them in growth, in harvest, or ready for planting. There are 365 growing days a year on Tucson farms, and one harvest succeeds another without any intervening period of idleness. These farms will grow anything that any other farm will grow—they are adequately and permanently watered, and you, as an owner, will own your stock in the water company. We own the title to the land and will convey to you your warranty deed whenever you are ready for it. This land is bound to double in value before the expiration of the time we give you to pay for it. You can walk to the city of Tucson from these farms.

The market is Tucson and the adjacent copper mining camps of Bisbee, Benson, and Tombstone, with their 100,000 population and payroll of a million dollars a month. Truck gardening and dairy farming popular; likewise poultry, cattle, and hog raising. All are profitable. The climate is mild and equable throughout the year. Tucson and Tucson farms are delightful places to live, summer and winter. Write or call at our Chicago office for details and illustrated circulars and booklets.

Better Times

[Private car excursions Tuesdays, Nov. 24 and Dec. 8.]

THE EASING of the money market by the opening of Federal Reserve Banks last Monday and the enormous exports have brought better business conditions. Orders on hand for shoes, clothes, and manufactured goods from the nations at war are estimated at $250,000,000. From 10,000 to 15,000 men have been put back to work in Gary and Chicago Heights alone. All wage earners will soon be back at work, and those who want to buy land should not hesitate. Get good farm land and you will always have profitable work ahead—no layoffs.

MR. FARM RENTER, no time can be more favorable for you to purchase land. Already the exports of wheat and flour total 127,000,000 bu from July 1 to date, compared with 146,000,000 bu for the whole year of 1913, and you are getting more per bushel. The British parliament has just set aside $1,125,000,000 to carry on the war eight months longer. Farmers in America will have to raise the crops for Europe next year. You won't have a better chance to buy land than right now. Next spring lands everywhere will go up another notch in value, and this applies in the Swigart tract, where hundreds more farmers will move on their lands and start their new farms.

THERE ARE ONLY TWO EXCURSIONS left this year to see this tract of over 50,000 acres in Mason, Manistee, Lake, and Wexford Counties, Michigan. There is so much to describe about these lands, their advantages of markets, transportation, moderate climate, fruit belt location, near Chicago, Grand Rapids, and other big centers, class of people, about the good schools, churches, good roads, new towns, good shipping facilities, the warm, quickly producing soil, and great diversity of crops, that I have published a large 72 page book, illustrated with 116 photographic views. Write me for this free book or call and get it; also a large map and see samples of our 1914 crops of clover, rye, wheat, oats, buckwheat, alfalfa, vetch, corn, potatoes, and vegetables and fruits.

A PROMINENT AUTHOR of a number of standard books on farming called on us last week to learn more about our colonizing work, and said he did not know of any land in the United States that is as good value for the money as what I offer. Other men have frequently told me that my lands are under valued. But the prices are such that he whoever will may own a piece of land—$10 to $35 per acre, and much of the best quality and best lying land $18 per acre on seven years' time, $10 to $50 down and $5 to $10 per month on 40 acres, or annual terms if preferred. While you are buying the land, after a part is paid for, you are insured for the balance. Don't wait until the season is over and it is too late. You can't make any mistake buying this land. Are you ambitious to own a farm home and become independent?

OUR LAST TWO PRIVATE CAR EXCURSIONS will be Tuesdays, Nov. 24 and Dec. 8, by the P M R R., leaving my offices at 11:30 a. m. Fare $8.80 the round trip to Wellston, rebated on purchase. You get back to Chicago at 7:20 a. m. Thursday or Friday of the same week. Automobiles and guides furnished free. Offices remain open Saturday afternoons and Monday evenings.

A REBUILT CADILLAC

It's a Safe Used Car to Buy.

SPECIAL VALUES NOW

A rebuilt Cadillac is superior to any new car at the same price. They are the truest values on the street. By rebuilt we mean that the cars have been entirely taken apart, each part examined, and, if necessary, replaced by a new part made at the Cadillac factory; the entire car repainted and refinished like new; all equipment put in first class condition—the whole car, in fact, carefully reconstructed until it is as good as new in every detail.

We offer Cadillacs exclusively as we do not accept other makes in trade. Consequently we are as interested in the performances of these rebuilt cars as we are in new Cadillacs. In actual service values, these cars are worth a great deal more than we ask for them, and we usually have a variety of body styles to select from. See them before you buy.

The difference in price on our cars now and the storage on same until next spring will pay you to buy now. Come in and look them over. We give you terms.

PACKARD USED CAR POLICY.

THE PACKARD square deal policy protects our patrons. It applies to a used Packard just as well as to a new Packard.

WE SELL USED CARS FOR OUR CUSTOMERS—NOT FOR PROFIT.

Every used car undergoes a rigid technical examination. Some we offer just as the customers turn them in and some we rebuild. The latter have all the appearance of new cars and are guaranteed. The former cost you less, but in either case you get full value for your money. The prices we are asking for the cars of various makes and types listed in our latest Used Car Bulletin are by no means commensurate with their intrinsic worth.
A card will bring the Bulletin.

Buy an Automobile as you would a bond—study the security back of it.

U. S. COLLECTOR READY FOR WAR TAX RUSH TOMORROW.

Final Date for Payment to Government Expected to Bring 30,000 Before Dec. 1.

The final rush of the war tax payers is expected to begin tomorrow by officials in the internal revenue department. Julius Smietanka, the collector, will have fifteen extra clerks to eliminate congestion. Between 30,000 and 40,000 persons are expected before the first of December.

Documentary and proprietary stamps and licenses have arrived, the collector announced yesterday. Persons who fail to pay their taxes are liable to a penalty of 50 per cent of the amount of the assessment.

Taxes which must be paid by Dec. 1 are those on theaters, bowling alleys, pool and billiard halls, cigar dealers, circuses, and proprietors of shows given for profit.

SCENE LIKE RHINE IN "GERMANY" OF SOUTH AMERICA

Chile's "Deutschland" More Teutonic than Chilean; Main City Growing.

BY FRANK G. CARPENTER.

[Copyright: 1914: By Frank G. Carpenter.]

VALDIVIA, Chile.—Should Germany succeed in the present war and dominate the world there are two parts of South America which may become German colonies; one is in southern Brazil.

It consists of several states populated by Germans. It has towns and cities governed by officials who speak German. It has German newspapers, and there are German signs over the stores. There are German factories and breweries, and the best businesses of the country are owned by Germans. That region is sometimes called West Deutschland, and it has more good land than Germany in Europe.

The other great region is situated here in the lower part of Chile, and it might be called South Deutschland. It is far below Valparaiso and not far from the strait of Magellan. The Germans began to come here sixty-five years ago, and so many have immigrated that some of the towns are now more German than Spanish.

First Settlers from Hamburg.

The first settlers were from Hamburg. They arrived in 1850 and were 120 days on the way. They numbered seventy men, ten women, and five children. That colony was followed by others, and by the close of our civil war there were more than 1,400 Germans who had settled there.

They came as pioneers and had to cut their homes out of the woods. They chopped down the forests and built log cabins and planted wheat fields and orchards. They have now cleared a large part of the country and have many fine farms. They are more prosperous and thrifty than the ordinary Chilenos, and many have become rich.

Some of them have great sawmills and are shipping lumber to all parts of Chile. Others raise wheat, potatoes, and apples, and not a few are engaged in merchandising. Owing to their enterprise the region promises to become one of the richest and most prosperous parts of the republic.

City of 20,000 Growing.

Already many large towns have grown up, such as Osorno, Puerto Montt, and Valdivia. Valdivia is the metropolis. Lying 500 miles south of Santiago, in the heart of the woods, it is surrounded by new farms and clearings. Its port is the principal one of south Chile, and at it machinery of all kinds, and especially agricultural implements, are landed.

The city has now 20,000 people and it is rapidly growing. It had a fire a few years ago which swept away the buildings of wood and tin which then existed, and in their places we now find a new city, built along modern lines and up to date in every particular. Many of the buildings are of reinforced concrete and of two or three stories.

The shops have plate glass windows, coming down to the pavements, and the window displays are better than those of our towns of the same size at home. The streets are wide and the pavements about twice as broad as those of Santiago. The whole tone of Valdivia is white, and the concrete construction makes it look like a substantial municipality built of Berea sandstone.

More German than Chilean.

Indeed, Valdivia, is more German than Chilean. The signs over the stores are in German, and there are German cafés, in which you get excellent beer made by the Germans. This beer is famous throughout the republic, and it is shipped north and south on the steamers.

The chief hotel here has a French name, but it is run by a German, and Germans own the greater part of the town. One of the leading exceptions is the chief importing establishment. This is American. It belongs to W. R. Grace & Co., having a pretentious two story building, covering the whole of one side of the plaza. This store is filled with American machinery, from windmills and reapers and thrashers to hand sewing machines and notions. It has also American canned goods and textiles.

When I arrived in Valdivia at night I expected to find everything closed up as tight as a drum, as is the custom in nearly every Spanish-American city along the west coast.

Down here at Valdivia the town is alive after dark, and Saturday night the stores are open till late in the evening. The place is lighted by electricity, and crowds walk the streets and promenade back and forth in the plaza.

Valdivia is situated on the Valdivia river, which flows from the Andes down to the Pacific. The town is about twelve miles from the mouth of the river, where lies the port of Corral. All goods are landed at Corral and carried up to Valdivia in barges. I took a steam launch and rode down to look at the port. The stream is about half as wide as the Potomac at Washington.

We first sailed by lumber yards, boat building works, sawmills, and other woodworking establishments. A little later we wound our way among low hills covered with woods, passing through a maze of fine scenery.

The stream is of an emerald green, and it flows between dark green banks and low hills as precipitous as those of the Rhine between Mainz and Cologne.

Had the hills been covered with vineyards we might have imagined ourselves on a launch on the Rhine, for there were many Germans on board.

VOCATIONAL SESSION ENDS.

Art and Industrial League Convention Closes with Wage Discussion.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Vocational Art and Industrial league was ended at the Hotel Sherman last night with the selection of San Francisco for the meeting in July, 1915. These officers were elected:

President at large—Carroll S. Page, Washington, D. C.
President—Frances G. Blair, Springfield, Ill.
First vice president—William B. Austin, Chicago.
Second vice president—Warren E. Hicks, Madison, Wis.
Third vice president—Mrs. Florence Ellis, Cleveland, O.
Fourth vice president—Arthur Chamberlain, San Francisco.
Secretary and treasurer—Mrs. Robert L. McCall, Chicago.

H. M. Kurtsworth of Muskegon, Mich., was the principal speaker at the closing session, which was devoted to problems regarding wage workers.

TAXES BY STAMP TO BEGIN SOON

Federal Government Will Start Its Collection of Pennies.

LEVY ON MANY THINGS.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—Uncle Sam will place on sale all over the country in a few days souvenirs of the European war, and as Uncle Sam is a little hard up just now because of the European war a large sale is expected. Not that there is any great popular demand for these souvenirs, but that doesn't make any difference. They will be sold just the same, because Uncle Sam has made it obligatory to buy them. In fact, anybody who fails to buy one or more when Uncle Sam says it is necessary may be fined or thrown into jail.

The price of Uncle Sam's souvenirs will be within reach of all. Some may be bought eight for a cent. Others will cost all the way up to $1,600 apiece. The collector of internal revenue in each district will fill all orders.

New Revenue Stamps.

The souvenirs are the new revenue stamps to denote the payment of the special taxes made necessary by the falling off in government revenue caused by the war in Europe. These stamp taxes, which hit various classes of legal and commercial documents, proprietary medicines, and wines, will go into effect Dec. 1, except wines, on which the tax already is being collected without the use of stamps.

There will be two classes of stamps for the payment of the new taxes. One class will be for use only on wines and proprietary medicines, the other for documents. Later a third set may be issued exclusively for wines, but the bureau of engraving and printing is too busy for that just now. There will be twenty-one denominations in each set.

The proprietary stamps will come in denominations of ⅛, ¼, ⅜, ½, ⅝, 1, 1¼, 1½, 1⅞, 2, 2½, 3, 3⅛, 3¾, 4, 4⅜, 5, 6, 8, 10, and 20 cents. All these stamps will be printed in black. The design is severely plain, something like the present postage due stamps. The stamps will be of the same design as the postage stamps, except that they will be oblong in shape. The denomination is shown in large, colorless numerals in the center with the words "U. S. Internal Revenue" and "Proprietary" above and "Cents" and "Series of 1914" below.

In Varied Designs.

The documentary stamps will come in more varied designs and colors. The denominations of ½, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, 25, 40, 50, and 80 cents will be printed in red. They will be the same size and shape as postage stamps, with the value expressed in large colorless numerals in the center, with the words "U. S. Internal Revenue" and "Documentary" above and "Cents" and "Series of 1914" below.

The documentary stamps of $1, in green; $2, in red; $3, in purple; $5, in blue; $10, in orange; $30, in vermilion; and 50 in lavender, will all have a Liberty head as the central design. The $100, in green, will have the Stuart portrait of Washington; the $500, in blue, will have the portrait of Hamilton; and the $1,000, in orange, will have the portrait of Madison. These stamps will be larger than the cents values.

These stamps will be in use only thirteen months, unless congress extends the operation of the law, and it is doubtful if many of the $500 and $1,000 stamps will be used, and probably not more than 100 of each will be printed. About the only thing the $1,000 stamp can be used for is on a promissory note for $5,000,000 or a deed where the unincumbered value of the property conveyed exceeds $1,000,000. During the Spanish war period many $1,000 stamps were used on big railroad and industrial corporation mortgages, but these are exempt under the new law.

CHICAGO BANKERS PRAISED BY SUBTREASURER SHUMAN.

Federal Official Urges People of the Country to Show Their Financial Patriotism.

Irving Shuman, Chicago subtreasurer, in a speech before the German club at a luncheon yesterday in the Hotel Sherman, urged recognition of the human element in America's strife for commercial and trade extension in the wake of the European war.

His subject was "Financial Patriotism." He said there is nothing fundamentally wrong with the country's business conditions at the present time. The country, he said, is entering into a period of prosperity and vast commercial expansion, and the new regional bank system under the recently enacted currency law will do its share in the upbuilding of the nation's commercial supremacy.

Mr. Shuman praised Chicago bankers for keeping loans afloat despite colossal reductions in deposits last summer. He wanted the people of the country to show their "financial patriotism" by keeping their money in the banks.

COTTON MAY BREAK RECORD.

Quantity Ginned Up to Nov. 14 Sets New Mark; Crop of 16,000,000 Bales Indicated.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21.—Possibilities of this year's cotton crop equaling or even exceeding the greatest crop heretofore grown were indicated today by the census bureau's fifth ginning report of the season, which showed the quantity of cotton ginned prior to Nov. 14 was 11,624,708 bales, the heaviest on record. In the last seven years the average of the entire crop ginned to the end of the same period was 75 per cent. On that basis the present crop would seem to be between 15,500,000 and 16,000,000 bales.

SUSTAINS JOHN GUERIN WILL.

Judge Baldwin Dismisses Son's Action Seeking Receiver for $160,000 Estate.

Judge Baldwin yesterday sustained the will of the late John Guerin, formerly member of the board of education, in an opinion dismissing a suit seeking a receiver for the estate of $160,000 and a construction of the will. The estate was left in trust for specific purposes, M. Henry Guerin, James Guerin, sons, and Thomas B. Brougham, a friend, being named trustees. The suit was brought by Mark E. Guerin, another son, who, after the court's ruling, took an appeal.

MIDWEST FIRMS PLAN OWN SOUTH AMERICAN BANKS

Chicago, Illinois, and Iowa Men Consider Branches as Trade Aid.

Business men and bankers in Chicago, Illinois, and Iowa are considering a plan to establish branch banks in South and Central America. The plan developed yesterday after the delegates returned from the Mississippi valley trade conference at Memphis.

When the two days' conference had ended the delegates were agreed that a bank financed by manufacturers and business men in the Mississippi valley must precede trade extension in the countries of the south. One plan outlined by one of the delegates provides for a bank in the United States with a capital of $500,000, each of twenty-five business firms here to take stock up to $20,000.

With this bank as a working basis, two branches would be established. One would be placed in a thrifty city in Central America and the other would be established on the west coast of South America, away from the competition of the New York institutions and the foreign banks.

Meeting of Much Benefit.

The delegates who attended the conference from Chicago declared the meeting was beneficial to the Mississippi valley. It gave the business men from the various states an opportunity to exchange ideas, and the addresses on foreign trade by First Assistant Secretary of Commerce Sweet; John Barrett, director-general of the Pan-American union, and Elliott H. Goodwin, secretary of the United States chamber of commerce, furnished a mass of foreign trade information.

"The delegates came away," Hubert F. Miller, manager of the Association of Commerce, said, "with the feeling that business in South and Central America will follow money. Americans must make investments in the institutions of the country, giving them a purchasing power, before it will be possible to obtain any volume of business there."

The banking committee provided for at the meeting will have the real work of the valley to accomplish. Edward E. Gore of Chicago, who was chairman of the conference in Memphis, will name this committee soon. It is probable that a branch bank will grow out of their work. However, the plans have not materialized sufficiently to make the announcement officially.

Trading Exchange Remote.

The committee named to consider an exchange of commodities with a possible trading company, and the committee on the improvement of the Mississippi river are not expected to accomplish much immediately. The trading company plan, the delegates say, must be worked out by private companies, and such a company is not expected to make great headway until banks are established in the Latin American countries.

The situation of the banks in the United States was explained by John J. Arnold, chairman of the foreign trade committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce and vice president of the First National bank.

"The American banks cannot use their assets for the financing of new banks," Mr. Arnold said. "Three propositions are presented under the plan outlined by the trade conference. In the first place, if the banks of each section of the United States start branch banks in South America it will create an intersectional rivalry.

Disapproves U. S. Branch Bank.

"The establishment of a regional reserve bank in the south would only aid in collections, which would not facilitate matters much. In the third place, the bank that will aid the American manufacturer in these countries is one which can finance imports and exports and make an exchange of credits instead of cash.

"Such a bank should be established by individuals and corporations who are interested in an export business. If anything is to be accomplished in a foreign trade way, the financial end must be worked out by the manufacturers and banks. Now is the time to do that."

Robert W. Patterson, president of the First National bank of Denver, arrived in Chicago during the day from a two years' tour of South America. He is convinced there is a wonderful opportunity for the American manufacturer as well as banker in South American countries.

"FIXES" HIS FIRM'S BOOKS; IT FAILS; HE ENDS LIFE.

Manager of New York Commission House Writes Wife Note and Leaps Five Stories to Death.

New York, Nov. 21.—[Special.]—Following the discovery that he had tampered with the books of the concern for which he had worked for over thirty years, William E. Bostelmann, general manager and cashier of the old commission firm of Frederick Probst & Co., of 82 Beaver street, which failed a few days ago for more than $1,000,000, wrote a short, pathetic note to his wife, and then leaped to his death from the fifth story of the building where the firm had offices. To just what extent Bostelmann's irregularities entered into the firm's failure is not known. Only a further search of the books will reveal that.

It is believed, however, that they were extensive and had much to do with bringing about the suspension of the house that has been doing business since 1845.

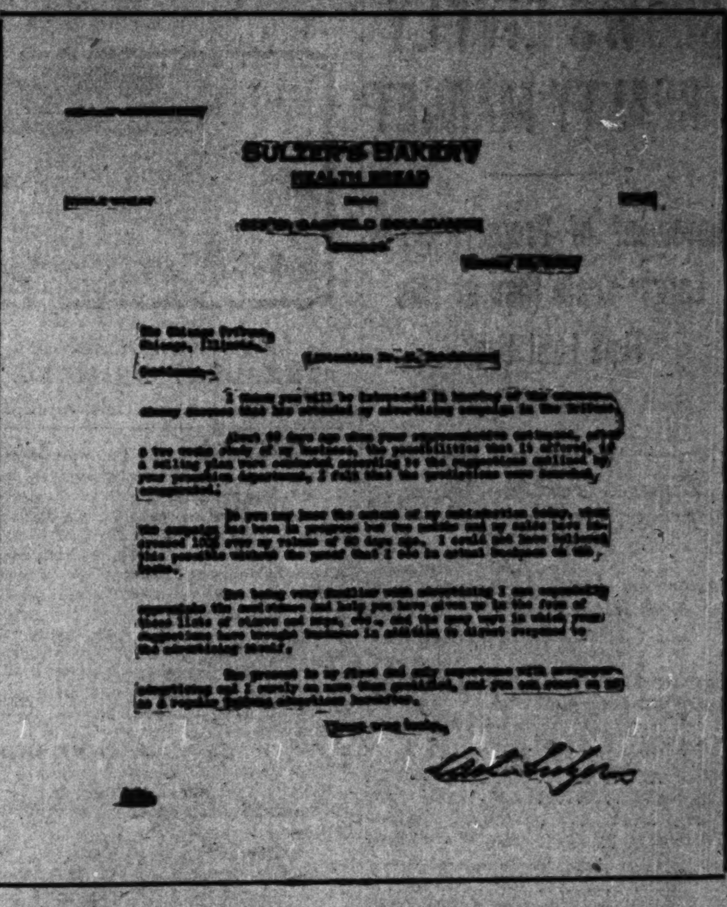
MOUSE TIES UP THE WHOLE TOWN OF HUTCHINSON, KAS.

Hutchinson, Kas., Nov. 21.—An undersized mouse, short circuiting some wires in the city electric light plant here, stopped the street cars, put out all the lights in the city, shut down certain parts of the salt plants, chemical works, flour mills, strawboard plant, newspaper typesetting machines, one telegraph company, and other industries depending on electric motors for power, for an hour.

Edward Benson, assistant engineer at the plant, tried to get the mouse off with a pair of tongs, without shutting down the plant, and the little animal jumped into a connection that electrocuted it, causing several thousand people to take a vacation until the burned out switches and wires could be repaired.

Mr. Benson was badly burned about the hands, arms, and face, but will recover.

What We Did for Carl Sulzer
We Can Do for You



How The Chicago Tribune Doubled Carl Sulzer's Business in Two Months

Carl Sulzer built up a baking business which was turning out 1,800 loaves of bread a day last August. He specialized in bran and gluten bread. It was good bread and the business grew—but slowly.

On Aug. 23, 1914, Carl Sulzer began an advertising campaign in The Chicago Tribune, which cost him $1,537.00 for two months. At the end of two months he was baking 4,200 loaves of bread a day, an increase of 133 per cent. Whether this increase has been sufficient to pay for the advertising may be judged from the fact that the bran bread sells at 10c a loaf and the gluten bread at 20c a loaf.

What The Chicago Tribune Did

The Chicago Tribune did more than merely sell Mr. Sulzer space in its columns.

The Promotion Department of The Chicago Tribune made a preliminary investigation of the possibility of extending the sale of bran bread in Chicago. Grocers were interviewed on the subject by the trained merchandising men of The Chicago Tribune, and a complete written analysis made of the situation.

Before a line of advertising was printed the first ads were prepared in proof form.

These proofs were then shown to the leading grocers of Chicago, with whom the Promotion Department of The Chicago Tribune keeps in close touch, so that they might be prepared for the increased demand.

When the advertising began to run, each mail brought inquiries from hundreds of miles around, and The Chicago Tribune supplied Mr. Sulzer with forms of letters to utilize these inquiries to the best advantage. As a result the best grocers in many cities now sell Sulzer's Bread, which hitherto had only a local market.

AGAIN last week the number of recorded transfers showed an increase over those for the corresponding week a year ago, thus confirming in a substantial manner the recent statements made in this column regarding the rapid improvement in the real estate market. Mere assertions as to improving market conditions are not always convincing, howsoever favorably one may be disposed toward such a conclusion, but there is no escaping the logic of the recorder's office figures, which clearly indicate that practically normal conditions prevail in the market.

Individual brokers here and there may and do complain that business is a little slow, but the figures show that the movement of property is on a larger scale than it was a year ago at this time, which even the most confirmed pessimist will have to admit shows a pretty healthy state of affairs.

New Bank Aids Market.

It would indeed be surprising if the real estate market, which has stood up under the fierce adverse pressure of the last three months as has no other line of business, did not respond to the quickening touch of the great business revival which has set in, born of the beneficient potentialities of the new reserve bank law and the great economic advantages which the country enjoys because of the European war.

As has been stated before, Chicago enjoys peculiar advantages just now because of the thoroughly healthy value conditions which prevail, its remarkable growth in an industrial and commercial way, as well as the wide measure of benefit which is certain to come from the many great public and quasi-public works which it is about to undertake.

Development Prospects Good.

It is difficult to escape the conclusion that the city is entering upon a period of unprecedented development in a material as well as esthetic sense, in which there will be developed new zones of activity in a building and real estate way, with a wide distribution of much higher land values in many of the intermediate and outlying parts of the city.

Outside of the figures of the recorder's office there are other tangible evidences of improved market conditions, notably the activity in manufacturing property, to which attention was called particularly last week and which finds expression again this week in several important transactions, one of which is particularly interesting and significant.

Interest in Acreage Revives.

Another suggestive feature of the week's market is the evident revival of interest in acre property for subdivision purposes, which suffered something of a slump during the halting and monetary stringency of the summer and early fall months. Outside business and flat properties are also commanding renewed attention.

There also is a marked increase in building coincident with the growing ease in the mortgage loan market, as evidenced by the statement of Building Commissioner Ericsson that despite the falling off in the building activities of other cities Chicago's operations are above normal and that there was more building under way here last month than in any other city in the world.

View of an Optimist.

John A. Carroll, president of the Hyde Park State bank and one of the leading real estate operators in that part of the city, is an optimist as to the real estate outlook. This is what he says:

"What does the early future promise for Chicago real estate and its allied security, the real estate first mortgage? If we read the times aright, these two forms of investment are approaching the dawn of the fairest day they have seen for many years. Why? The answer seems apparent. In the first place, many investors, who have heretofore confined their investments to stocks, bonds, and other forms of securities, largely on the theory that they were easily convertible, have learned that many such securities have possessed the undesirable features of the speculative investment, in that they were not stable and dependable. They had hoped for advances and realized depreciations and shrinkage.

Can Be Converted Easily.

"These investors are now ready to return to the more substantial, if less liquid, real estate investments. Besides, the chief asset of the hitherto popular form of investment, stocks, bonds, and their correlated securities, has been their quick convertibility, their liquid quality. Lately it has been demonstrated that they have not possessed this feature; in fact, there has not been for some time, and is not now, a ready market for them.

"Those who have owned Chicago real estate have not suffered by the general depression. In fact, the reverse is true because the money which usually flowed in these channels has been diverted and real estate has benefited. It will be agreed by all active dealers in real estate that the market, considering the general depression, has been unusually good during the last few months. This may not apply so much to central reality, but a perusal of the transfers of the outlying sections will show a strong feeling of confidence in both business and residence properties.

"The staple investment, the real estate first mortgage, also has found new favor with the investing public. The axiom 'A real estate first mortgage never passes its dividend' has in these days of retrenchment, when dividends on stocks have been passed, made a strong appeal to the conservative investor, and a good market for first mortgages has resulted. This demand has caused the renewal of activity in building and other real estate loans, giving additional help to real estate.

Predicts a Good Year.

"Another important factor that must not be overlooked is the change in the attitude of banks toward real estate first mortgages. Much of this change of sentiment has resulted from the causes named above; that is, the realization by bankers that this class of security provided the very best kind of collateral for loans, whereas their vaults were crowded with the less dependable collateral in the shape of bonds and stocks of uncertain value.

"It might also be said that the opening of the federal reserve banks at this time, releasing a large amount of money that has reduced already the current rates for money, will have the effect of forcing a portion of this money into first mortgages because of the good rates they usually bear; i. e., 5 per cent to 6 per cent.

"Brokers and dealers in Chicago real estate and real estate first mortgages may well expect a good year in 1915."

HIGH-GRADE MOVIE HOUSES SHOWING HEALTHY DEMAND.

Shakespeare Theater Sale Big Deal of the Week—Two Other Big Amusement Places Planned.

A noteworthy transaction in outside moving theater property was closed during the week in the acquirement by the United Moving Pictures company, G. G. Schoneberg, president, from the Alfred Amusement company of the lease of the Shakespeare theater, at the northwest corner of East Forty-third street and Ellis avenue, for a reported bonus of $35,000. The lease has ten years to run, and the moving picture company also secured an option for an extension of ten additional years at a reported annual rent of $8,000.

The Shakespeare theater was opened last June, has a seating capacity of 1,000, and is one of the best appointed playhouses of its kind in the city. Hume & Co. were the brokers, representing both parties.

As indicative of the growth of theaters with large seating capacity in the outlying districts, it is reported that contracts have been entered into for the erection of two 2,000 seat all on one floor theaters and that options for the lease of them are about to be exercised. It is understood that one will be located at Sixty-third and Halsted streets and the other at Wilson avenue and Sheridan road.

Hume & Co., who were also the brokers, say there is a demand for large theaters that cannot be filled, as, despite the 700 motion picture theaters in the city, there are comparatively few that are up to date.

NEW POSTOFFICE SITES VALUATION TO BE MADE.

Chicago Real Estate Board's Committee to Appraise Proposed Locations on the West Side.

Another step toward the realization of the proposed west side postoffice building was made last week, when the Chicago real estate board instructed its valuation committee to value several sites now under consideration. The request came from the Chicago plans commission, which had been requested by the treasury department at Washington to secure a valuation of these properties.

The appraisals, which are to be made free of charge, will cover first the two blocks bounded by Canal, Clinton, Madison, and Adams streets. Second, any two adjacent blocks contiguous to the new west side terminal.

At the request of A. S. Macgregor, site agent of the treasury department, the committee will make a valuation of the ground and buildings in blocks 25, 26, 27, 47, and 48.

Block 25 is bounded by Madison and Monroe, Jefferson and Desplaines streets; block 26 by Monroe, Adams, Jefferson, and Desplaines streets; block 27 by Adams and Jackson, Jefferson and Desplaines streets; block 47 by Monroe and Adams, Jefferson and Clinton streets; block 48 by Adams and Jackson, Jefferson and Clinton streets.

The two blocks at Madison, Canal, Clinton, and Adams streets are conceded to be the most desirable, but their high value is thought to be prohibitive.

REALTY BOARDS MERGER OFF

Vote of Chicago Organization Is Against Amalgamation with the Cook County Organization.

There is to be no merger of the two real estate boards, for the present at least. This was determined at the special meeting of the Chicago board last Wedesday, when it registered its disapproval of the plan by a vote of 113 to 8. It was declared in the resolution presented by Willys W. Baird and adopted by the above vote that inherent and insurmountable obstacles to the consolidation of the two organizations existed, and that any further action along this line at the present time is inexpedient and would avail nothing.

THE ARDMORE APARTMENT BUILDING.

THE DREXEL SQUARE BUILDING.

TWO attractive apartment buildings in course of construction are the Ardmore, at the northeast corner of Ardmore and Kenmore avenue, and the building at the southeast corner of Drexel and Hyde Park boulevards, at Drexel square. The former contains nine apartments of 10 rooms each, 3 baths and sun parlor, and will occupy a lot 100x150 feet. It is expected to have a gross annual rent of $22,000, and, together with the land, will represent an investment of about $140,000. The Drexel Square building will contain six apartments, three of eight rooms and 3 baths and sun parlor, and three of ten rooms, three baths and sun parlor. The apartments will rent at from $180 to $200 a month. It will occupy a lot 90x113 feet, and with the land will represent an investment of about $185,000. Greenebaum Sons' Bank and Trust company have underwritten a 6 per cent bond issue of $70,000 on the Ardmore and $40,000 on the Drexel Square building.

Among the transfers recorded during the week was one in which a father conveyed to his daughter and son as a gift a twenty-eight apartment building at Kenmore and Lawrence avenues, said to be valued at $120,000.

The grantor was Peter D. Middlekauf and the grantees his daughter, Marjorie M. Sherman, and his son, Robert Middlekauf.

"I gave the property to my children," he said, "because I do not believe in waiting until after death to let them enjoy their share."

MEDIUM PRICED FLATS FEATURE TRADES OF WEEK

Sale of "Greenleaf Terrace" Apartments Biggest Deal in That Class of Property.

There were not many deals of any particular magnitude in outside business and flat properties closed during the week, the bulk of this business being in medium priced properties.

The feature of the week's market in this field was the deal in which Chauncey J. Blair conveyed the Waukesha apartment building at the southeast corner of Blackstone avenue and East Sixty-fourth street, together with the Blair ranch of 1,080 acres in Newton county, Ind., to Frank C. Lewin in exchange for what is known as the Greenleaf Terrace apartments in Rogers Park, at the southeast corner of Greenleaf and Greenview avenues.

The south side property occupies a lot 100x190 feet and contains forty apartments of five and six rooms. It is stated to have a gross annual rent of about $14,000, but no consideration was given in the transfer.

Flats Valued at $325,000.

The Rogers Park property comprises two buildings, containing seventy-five apartments, and occupies a lot 171x325 feet, and it is said to have been valued in the transaction at $325,000. It is stated to have a gross annual rent of $40,000 and was conveyed subject to an incumbrance of $160,000. Francis W. Robinson, sales manager of the United Realization company, is stated to have represented Mr. Blair in the transaction.

The south side apartment building subsequently was sold by Mr. Lewin to Gertrude C. Marquette, and while the consideration was withheld it is said to have been about $100,000, the purchaser giving back a part purchase money mortgage for $45,000.

Another South Side Deal.

Another large apartment house deal closed late in the week was the sale by R. F. Schenck to James Hays of the twenty-eight apartment building at 936-40 East Forty-second place, between Drexel boulevard and Ellis avenue, for a reported consideration of $86,500, subject to an incumbrance of $22,500. Mr. Schenck took in part payment a 640 acre farm in Kankakee county, valued at $100 an acre. Emil Sackrison represented both parties.

Another good sized south side flat deal covers the property at the northeast corner of Wabash avenue and Seventieth street, which has been sold by Carl Edward to Solomon Lazar and William Levin for a reported consideration of about $50,000, the transfer being subject to an incumbrance of $34,000. The building, which contains eighteen apartments, occupies a lot 50x160 feet. C. W. Crawley is stated to have been the broker in the transaction.

Evanston Property Sold.

An interesting transaction in Evanston business property closed and made a matter of record is the purchase by Josiah Cratty, the attorney, from Martha Zimmerman of the property at the northeast corner of Chicago avenue and Kedzie street. The lot is irregular in shape, having a frontage of 60 feet on Chicago avenue and 153 feet on Kedzie street, with a width on the alley in the rear of 87 feet.

It is improved with a brick and stone building containing four stores, seven offices, and ten flats, and is said to have a gross annual rent of about $7,500. A consideration of $1 is given in the transfer, which is made subject to an incumbrance of $22,000, but the actual price is said to have been about $60,000, Mr. Cratty giving in part payment south side Chicago property. B. B. Clover & Bro. were the brokers.

McGuire & Orr sold for Andrew P. Anderson and Buett B. Clover to James Ball and Jane Ferguson the twelve flat building at the northeast corner of Elmwood avenue and Washington street, Evanston, for $49,000, taking in part payment 264x417 feet at Longwood and Hawthorne avenues.

Acreage Shows Activity.

An interesting feature of the outside was the activity shown in acres for subdivision purposes. This class of property has been rather dull for some time past owing to the slowing up of the subdivision market, but the present buying seems to point to a renewal of the activity in subdivision property, which activity was particularly in evidence during the early part of the year.

One of the transactions was the purchase by L. A. Kinsey & Son, subdividers, of a tract of thirty-two acres at Milwaukee and Elston avenues, facing on Milwaukee avenue. The property, which was acquired from Frank A. Rockholdt, comprises altogether 255 lots, forty of which are on Milwaukee avenue and fifty fronting on Sixty-fourth avenue.

The property will be placed on the market at once, and it is announced that all the residence lots will be sold with building restrictions. It is stated that Kinsey & Son have had the property under option for several months and closed the purchase because of the active demand for Milwaukee avenue frontage in that neighborhood. It is a part of the new territory made accessible by the extension of the Milwaukee avenue car line, which now passes by the property. E. Orris Hart & Co. were the brokers.

Forty Acres in Deal.

Another interesting acre deal is the purchase by McIntosh Bros., the subdividers, through their sales manager, Grover C. Elmore, from the Northern Trust company, trustee, of a tract of forty acres bounded by Seventy-first street, Seventy-third street, California avenue, and Rockwell street, for a reported consideration of $36,000.

The purchasers are planning to place the property on the market at once. Both parties were represented by E. Orris Hart & Co.

Record was made of the sale by Peter Irmeter to Claude W. Morris of a tract of twenty-five acres at the northwest corner of Devon and California avenues, a nominal consideration being given, subject to an incumbrance of $12,000. Mr. Morris subsequently conveyed to the Chicago Title and Trust company.

SOUTHERN FIRM GETS FACTORY SITE IN CHICAGO

Ahrens & Ott Company Closes Contract with the W. H. Thompson Estate.

Another important transaction was closed in manufacturing property during the week which is of special interest by reason of the fact it involves the construction of a building to cost in excess of $150,000, and also because the company which has leased and is to occupy it is a southern concern which heretofore has confined its operations for the greater part to the southern parts of the country. It is the Ahrens & Ott Manufacturing company, with branches at Nashville, New Orleans, Houston, San Antonio, and Fort Worth. It is closely allied with the Sanitary Manufacturing company, among the largest manufacturers of porcelain enameled ware in the world.

The company has closed a contract with the William Hale Thompson estate by which the latter will construct for the occupancy of the company a seven story and basement heavy mill construction building, which it has leased to the company for a term of years at a term rent of $356,000. The building will occupy a lot 184x116 feet, on the west side of Peoria street, between Madison and Washington streets, with a sixteen foot alley on either side and a twenty foot alley in the rear. Its cost is placed at about $155,000. The property has been held intact by the Thompson family for over half a century.

Proves Chicago Advantages.

The expansion of the company at this time is significant of the confidence felt by its management in the industrial and general business outlook as well as a recognition of the commanding advantages offered by Chicago in this field. The lease was negotiated by S. C. [illegible] Hibbard, Porter & Bro. and White & Tabor.

There were several minor transactions in manufacturing and warehouse property, one comprising the sale by the Rehwig estate to the Central Upholstering company of the four story factory building at 1840 Austin avenue for a reported consideration of about $25,000, which the company will occupy with its business. Frederick E. Hummel & Co. were the brokers.

West Side Property Sold.

Grant Carpenter & Co. also sold for Callahan & Co., law book publishers, to Pasquale Gandiano the six story and basement building on 25x100 feet of ground at 742 West Taylor street, between Halsted and Desplaines streets, for a reported consideration of $15,000.

Two important leases are reported to have been closed in the Gage Bros. & Co. building at 18 South Michigan avenue, in the block between Madison and Monroe streets. It is reported that Dunlap & Co., hatters, have closed a lease of the south store in the building, 20x75 feet, and that the middle store and all the space on the first floor back of the seventy-five feet has been leased by Huylers, confectioners. The north part of the first floor will be used by the Gage company, it is reported, for an entrance to the upper floors. It is said that Dunlap & Co. are to pay about $10,000 a year and Huylers about $15,000.

Trust Deed for $150,000 Loan.

In connection with the construction of the Calumet building at 6315-6323 Cottage Grove avenue Thomas Gaynor and Frank Nasher have given a trust deed to the Chicago City Bank and Trust company to secure a loan of $150,000 running ten years and bearing 6 per cent interest.

The Shame of America--Second-Hand Art

By Gutzon Borglum

Foremost American Sculptor

BEFORE he died Corot, according to contemporary authorities, made an invoice of all the drawings and paintings which had come from his hand. This invoice included everything, even rudimentary sketches, for Corot was as careful a man as he was a great artist. The number of his works totalled about 800. Further report tells us that up to the present time the "Corot landscapes" which have been imported into this country, and entered through the Customs House, number 3600. For these wealthy Americans have paid from $1,000 to $20,000 apiece.

And people ask why there is no great original art in America! The demand for spurious Corots, as well as spurious classical statues, Renaissance paintings and art antiques, is one of the reasons. But only one.

America is a country without a secured aristocracy. Knowing nothing about art, newly rich Americans generally insist on buying the semblances of art which have the appearance of the respectability of antiquity—paintings browned and cracked, statues pock-marked and rusted.

At the present time one-half the students and art league boys in New York are engaged, not in seeking original expression, but in the production of copies of old masters and art fakes.

Art in America is marked by a dead mediocrity, with some comparatively few notable exceptions Among these are George Innes, Winslow Homer and William Rimmer of Boston. Rimmer showed an originality, power of conception and beauty of line that place him among the greatest men of art. The world doesn't know about him. Ninety per cent of American artists never heard of him.

AND yet no nation in the history of the world has ever offered such inspiration and opportunities for great artistic expression as America does today. This country is only four hundred years old. Therefore we constantly hear that it has no background for art. This talk about art growing out of an artistic period preceding it is all punk. Italy had no more background before the Renaissance than we have. Michel Angelo came out of the darkness. Art is not produced from the ashes of the past. It is the expression of the life, of the hour. To be original means to think of the things that concern the moment, to express the ambition of the Now. And life in America today involves mighty heroisms, dramatic struggles, the employment of terrific creative impulses. The sources for artistic inspiration and subjects are unlimited and stupendous. All the elements that enter into modern life—the competition of great business, the magnitude of commerce, international complications, politics—are themes to be interpreted through the medium of art. Here are subjects worthy of Angelo and one greater than Angelo. Yet the heroic, or mighty line, of art which gro out of a nation's impulses does not exist in our nation. For this painti is a powerful medium, although it is the feminine of sculpture. Sculpt is the great masculine note of the plastic art.

To be a great artist one must be a great man or great woman. As su the artist must be interested in the news and share the vision of the peop An artist must be first of all highly organized, sensitive, endowed wi feeling. The great riffraff of American artists—painters, sculptor architects—have little or no interest in anything out of their line of wor They are as wrapped up in their trade, and filled with a petty exaggerate self-importance and jealous rivalries, as a prima donna. They start o to be artists and learn to paint, model, or use the compass—that is a

TO produce great art our artists must learn to live. I do not mean the shall plunge into excesses. I mean they must enter into and feel t throb of present day existence. Great men are great because of t breadth of their interests; the greatest have been helpful and useful—aside from their artistic pursuits—in the intellectual activities of their ag Michel Angelo was a capable writer, engineer, and an architect of suc ability that he was put in charge of the building of St. Peter's. Da Vin was an inventor, engineer, writ and brilliant speaker. Velasque while doing his best work and whi he painted the famous portrait o Pope Innocent, was househol keeper of the palace of Philip IV Sir Frederick Leighton, Sir Josh Reynolds, Reubens and Watts, t name only a few, were all men wh would have been equally great a statesmen, men of letters o scientists.

AND what about the arti future of America? I do n believe that the American peo with their vitality and daring i pulses, their wholesomeness a progressiveness, will long st for the second, third and fou hand expressions and emotions the old world. The moveme and marvels of our generation a crying for artistic interpretati For a hundred years we beheld t vision of the Panama Can Goethe wrote of it. For fifty ye adverse interests lobbied agai it. Finally the obstructions w put aside; it became a fact great artist must see in this a n movement, a human triump there is a subject that is worthy commemoration. Great men nearly always above training great artist has never trailed c sistently after any master. I would have great art, let stud cease duplicating the middle a and take their subjects from life about them. Let them ty celebrate on Canvass or in m the Panama canal.

JORDAN IS A HARD ROAD

By Sir Gilbert Parker

Author of The Right of Way, The Seats of the Mighty, etc

Illustrated by J. N. Marchand

MRS. FINLEY was sitting alone in her little parlour, looking out of the window into the increasing darkness, through which faint stars twinkled, when she was startled by a heavy footfall on the gravel path without. Rising, she stood for a moment hesitating what to do, possessed by fear, though she was alone, Cora having gone to choir practice. She had the sense of safety of the elect who believe in the foreordained. It was the particular nature of the footstep that startled her, for the footstep had an ominous sound, she knew not why. She was not for somehow it recalled a night twenty-two years before, when her life took a turn in a new direction and had so continued. Now her brain cleared and she hastened into the hallway as the heavy footstep stopped, and a hand knocked on the lintel of the open door.

"Come in," she said. "What do you want?" she added quickly in slight agitation.

"It's Bill Minden," was the reply.

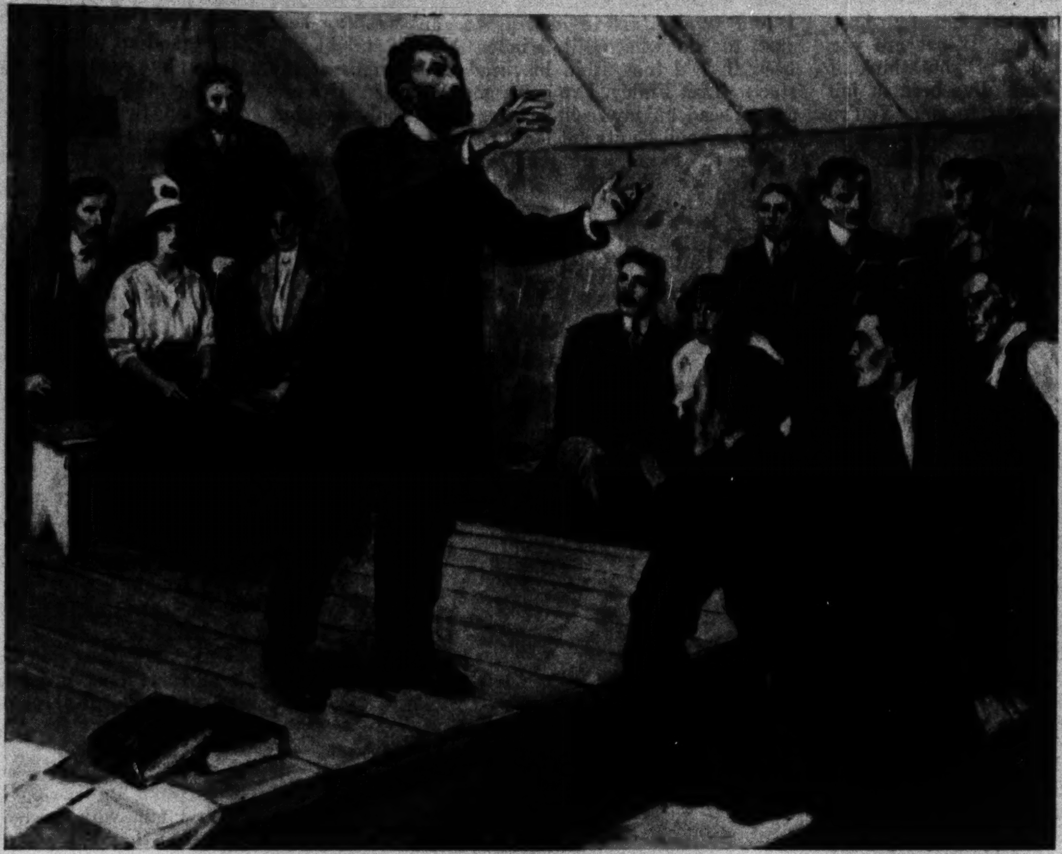
"What do you want?" she persisted, her voice a little querulous now.

"A word with you—just a word or two," was the answer.

"There were to be no more words forever," she rejoined.

"It's twenty-two years, and I want you to let me break my promise. We're getting old and you never can tell what'll happen," Minden urged.

SIR GILBERT PARKER, in the preceding instalment of his powerful six-part serial, pictured the arrival of Bill Minden, ex-bandit, in Askatoon, and the electrical effect upon the God-fearing, frontier community. His sudden reformation provokes wonder and curiosity. What can be his relation to Cora Finley and her widowed mother? Minden, by the way, is a flesh-and-blood character drawn from life.



"Saved!" he cried. "Saved! Glory be to God! There's a land that is fairer than day! I'm going—I'm going—I'm going there!"

SHE gave a great sigh. "Then wait till I pull down the blinds and light up," was her response.

"No, don't light up," he pleaded, stepping inside the hallway. "I haven't come here to do any harm, as you know. It's quieter in the dusk; the mind keeps steady-like when there's no light. It's like a blanket. Blind people are always quiet, and I've had to keep my eyes so wide open, and I've been going so hard for so long, that I can stand more dark than light. Eighteen hours dark in a day wouldn't be too much for me now."

"You talk like a poetry-book," Mrs. Finley replied with hardness in her tone. "Seems like Askatoon makes you a bit childish."

An almost animal-like grunt came from Bill Minden's lips. It had protest, agreement, anger and friendliness all in one; but he did not retort in words.

"I'm going to light up," she repeated, and went quickly into the room from which she had come.

From the hallway Minden heard the blinds pulled down, and presently a lighted lamp was placed on the round centre-table which held a bible and a photograph album.

"She'll scratch—maybe bite," he said to himself, "but she's all right. She only wants handling. I've got to get what I come for."

Presently the set, assertive figure of the woman made its appearance again. "You can come in now," she said with no kindness in her voice.

Determined goodness was written in her face. Her forehead was a little too high for generosity, a little too narrow for benevolence, yet from the somewhat peaked crown to the watchful brown eyes there were veneration and will quietly enthroned. Precision, routine, sober neatness marked everything she was and everything she did. Her hair carefully crimped and partially covering her ears showed some acute strain of vanity still actively alive. The big cameo brooch at her throat suggested an acquired social position which lay between, say, the seamstress and the druggist or perhaps the girl clerk and the big store-keeper. She was dressed as though "prepared for company," as the Askatoon people called it; yet it was only part of her regular life and custom. She was always "prepared for company." She washed dishes with a cloth tied to the end of a stick, she made fires with gloves on. She was the very pattern of precision.

There was something forbidding about her and yet something also which made Minden's eyes light up with satisfaction. He had seen her several times since he came to Askatoon, but nearly always at a distance. Once or twice he had passed her in the street, but she had given him no chance of addressing her. Once he went to the Methodist meeting-house on the chance of seeing her. She had, however, only come for the prayer-meeting, not for the regular service beforehand; and as it was not for him to stay to the prayer-meeting he had had only a glimpse of her as she went softly yet austerely to her pew, the position of which accurately defined her social status in Askatoon.

Bill had never till now got her absolutely into his eye since his arrival in Askatoon. A wonderful shining look of approval came into his face, as he took her all in with the trained eye of one who had so much lived by its training, by the deftness of the hand and the courage of the mind.

"What do you want?" she asked, looking at him steadfastly now.

He shrugged his huge shoulders good-humouredly. "You know, when you say that in the light like this it sounds sharper than when you said it in the dark. Couldn't you turn down the lamp a bit? I'd like to hear you talk," he added. "I haven't heard your voice for twenty-two years. I don't think it's changed any; but if you wasn't so religious and so particular, I'd say you'd more bones in your stays than you used to—a bit stiff, Missus, a bit stiff to an old friend."

A slight flush passed over her face. She resented the reference to her stays, but she waved her hand vaguely into the space around her, as it were, and said: "Where be you goin' to sit?"

HE looked at the horse-hair sofa which had as little attraction for him as it had for the pretty school-teacher, Cora, whose clothes and the wearing of whose clothes suggested taste, and he shook his head.

"I'd like the rocker, if I could take the lace curtin off it," he said pointing to the crochet-work antimacassar covering the back of the rocking-chair.

"Oh, it washes," she answered drily, "and I see you don't oil your hair! Leave it be."

He beamed over her, grinned broadly, and lowered himself comfortably into the capacious rocker. "Say, you've kep' your word 'Liza Finley," he said presently. "My gracious goodness, yes, you've kep' your word. You earned them three thousand dollars—you earned them, and three times three thousand dollars you earned. My, what you've gone and done and been to that girl—to that blessed babe I put into your arms twenty-two years ago!"

"It wasn't hard to do my duty by her. If you have a daughter you do your duty by her," said the other with a face that relaxed somewhat, but with underlying antagonism in her tone.

The good-natured smile died away from Minden's lips. "You needn't rub it in," he said huskily. "'Course she's your daughter. I give her to you twenty-two years ago, because I was a law-breaker, an' her mother was dead, an' I knew I never could run straight, an' I couldn't bring her up proper. I give her to you because I couldn't bear that when she grew up she'd know that her father was what he was going to be—a jail-bird. I knew it had to come, an' it did. So I give her to you an' your Steve with the last money I had — three thousand it was — for you to love her an' bring her up to be yours evermore. An' you done it because you had no child of your own, an' you wanted one an' Steve wanted one, an' you couldn't give him one. It looked as if my wife died just to give you hers. Mebbe that's how it was, for though she had a wide mind she couldn't have lived with me without having her pride hurt. An' I've kep' away from you, an' I've kep' my word for twenty-two years — now, haven't I? An' ain't she a flower of the prairie? Ain't she worth all you've done for her, 'Liza Finley? You look like a graven image, but you've got the heart the mother of Moses didn't have; you've got the heart of Pharaoh's daughter."

Mrs. Finley rose to her feet in an agitation she could not conceal

She made a sharp effort to stand him off. "You had no business to come; you've broke your word; you've got no rights here. Cora believes she's my child, and mebbe I love her better than any child I might have had, just because she had no mother of her own, and my duty said I must be more partic'ler for her because she was a trust. When she come back from school and told about a strange man speaking to her the first day you come to Askatoon, I knew it was you. You can make up your mind"—again her lips became set, her face hardened, her figure stiffened—"you can make up your mind you're not going to have her."

Minden half rose from his seat, but fell back with a helpless outward gesture. "What are you talkin' about?" he protested. "D'you think I don't know what's good for her? I've been in jail three times since I handed her over to you. You've brought her up like a lady—like a lady; you've give her a good schoolin', you've made her the choice and special fruit of this here garden. D'you think I'm not proud of it an' of her an' of what you've done? Do you think I don't sit right down and say, 'Bill Minden, you done the right thing when, bein' sure you was goin' to the devil, you put your little gal on the heavenly path'?"

"What have you come here for, then?" persisted the apprehensive woman, not relaxing her rigidity.

He waved an ingratiating hand to her. "Haven't I told you? Just to look at her an' be near her; just to see what Bill Minden himself might ha' been if he'd took it in his head to go right at the start. 'Liza Finley, I've got a good heart an' I've got a good head, an' my feelings belong to the holy way, but my tastes and habits get loose en route an'——"

"On the broad path that leadeth to destruction," she interjected in dull and broken accents.

He would not be provoked. "I tell you, 'Liza Finley, I understand every holy feeling you've got an' that my girl's got."

Again she protested. "Not your girl, but my girl, that for twenty-two years I've cared for, from the day I unpinned her and put her in her cot till now when I tuck her in at night, and she says 'Bless you, mammy'!"

Minden's eyes blinked. As he himself said, he had a good heart. "I know all that," he remarked. "You don't need to say it. But I'm getting old and lonely an' sick of the broad, stony highway. I want peace. I've got enough money to keep me till the end of the trail, an'——"

"But how did you get the money?" she interjected scornfully. "How did you come by it? Do you think an honest girl or any honest man or woman would share your stealings?"

"Don't be so hard," Bill replied soothingly. "You don't know how I got it; and anyway your own Methodis' church took too hundered dollars of it the other day for the new organ, an' the Baptists an' the Presbyterians an' the Holy Romans have took what I give them, to say nothing of the hospitals an' the charity plants. They all grab it, however I got it; an' anyway ain't it right they should? If it was got dishonest, why not give it to honest people, to the good people, to the prayer-people? See here, 'Liza Finley, what I've got I've got, an' it can't be give back. What's the good of trying to give back a lot of money to a lot of people that robbed a lot of other people, that stole from their bosom friends, that burgled their grandmothers! Don't you see you can't trace back the origin of what I've got?"

Mrs. Finley shook her (Continued on page 286)

THE PRINCE OF GRAUSTARK

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

Author of Beverly of Graustark, Brewsters Millions, Etc.

Illustrations by R. F. Schabelitz

ROBIN followed him through the door, down a narrow hallway, up a flight of stairs and out of another door upon a small portico, sheltered by a heavy canvas awning. Two men were standing at the railing, looking down upon the impressionistic lights of the sunken city. The Prince drew back, his face hardening.

"What does this mean, sirrah? You said —— "

At the sound of his voice the two men turned, stared at him intently for an instant and then deliberately strode past him, entered the door and disappeared. The person in brass buttons followed them.

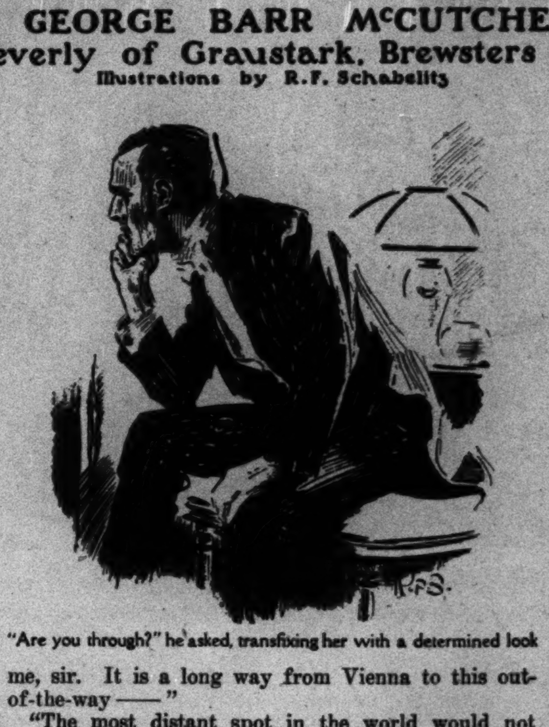
A soft, gurgling laugh fell upon his ears — a laugh of pure delight. He whirled about and faced — one who was no longer alone.

She was seated at the solitary little table in the corner; until now it had escaped his notice for the excellent reason that it was outside the path of light from the open doorway, and the faint glow from the adjacent porches did not penetrate the quiet retreat.

He sprang toward her with a glad cry, expecting her to rise. She remained seated, her hand extended. This indifference on her part may have been the result of cool premeditation. In any event, it served to check the impulsive ardour of the Prince, who, it is to be feared, had lost something in the way of self-restraint. It is certain — absolutely certain — that had she come forward to meet him, she would have found herself imprisoned in a pair of strong, eager arms,— and a crisis precipitated. He had to be content with a warm hand-clasp and a smile of welcome that even the gloom could not hide from his devouring eyes.

"My dear, dear Bedelia," he murmured. "I had almost given you up. Three long days have I waited for you. You —— "

"I have never broken a promise, Rex," she said coolly. "It is you who are to be commended, not I, for you see I was coming to Graustark anyway. I should not have been surprised if you had failed me, sir. It is a long way from Vienna to this out-of-the-way —— "



"Are you through?" he asked, transfixing her with a determined look

"The most distant spot in the world would not have been too far away to cause an instant's hesitation on my part," said he, dropping into the chair opposite her. "I would go to the end of the world, Bedelia."

"But your personal affairs — your business," she protested. "Can you neglect it so —— "

"My business is to find happiness," said he. "I should be neglecting it indeed if I failed to pursue the only means of attaining it. You are happiness, Bedelia."

"What would you sacrifice for happiness?" she asked softly.

"All else in the world," he replied steadily. "If I were a king, my realm should go if it stood between me and — you, Bedelia."

She drew back with a queer little gasp, as if suddenly breathless.

"Wait — wait just for a moment," she said, with difficulty steadying her voice. "This night may see the end of our adventure, Rex. Let us think well before we say that it is over. I know, if you do not, that a great deal depends upon what we are to say to each other tonight. You will ask me to be your wife. Are you sure that you appreciate all that it means to you and to your future if I should say yes to that dear question?"

He looked at her intently. "What do you know, Bedelia?"

"I know that you are the Prince of Graustark and that it is ordained that you shall wed one whose station is the equal of your own. You must think well, dear Rex, before you ask Bedelia Guile to be your wife."

"You know that I am — " he began, dully, and then burst into a mirthless laugh. "And knowing who I am, why do you not leap at the chance to become the Princess of Graustark? Why not realize an ambition that —— "

"Hush! You see how well I considered when I advised you to think before speaking? You are now saying things that are unworthy of you. You are forgetting that it is my privilege to say 'no' to the proposal of even the Prince of Graustark. I, too, am in search of happiness. I, too —— "

He stood up, leaning far over the table, a penetrating look in his eyes.

"How long have you known, Bedelia?"

"Since the second day out on the Jupiter," she replied serenely.

He slowly resumed his seat, overwhelmed by the sickening realization that his bubble had burst. She had known from the beginning. She had played with him. She had defied him!

"I know what you are thinking, Rex," she said, almost pleadingly. "You are thinking ill of me, and you are unjust. It was as fair for me as it was for you. We played a cautious game. You set about to win my love as you saw fit, my friend, and am I to be condemned if I exercised the same privilege? I was no more deliberate, no more reprehensible than you. Am I more guilty of deceit than you?"

He gave a great sigh of relief. "You are right," he said. "It is my turn to confess. I have known for many days that you are not Bedelia Guile. We are quits."

She laughed softly. "I think we have now arrived at the time to contemplate the results of our experiments. In the meantime, I have had no dinner. I trust that the Prince of Graustark has dined so lightly that he will not decline to share my repast with me. It has already been ordered — for two."

"By jove, you — you amaze me!" he exclaimed.

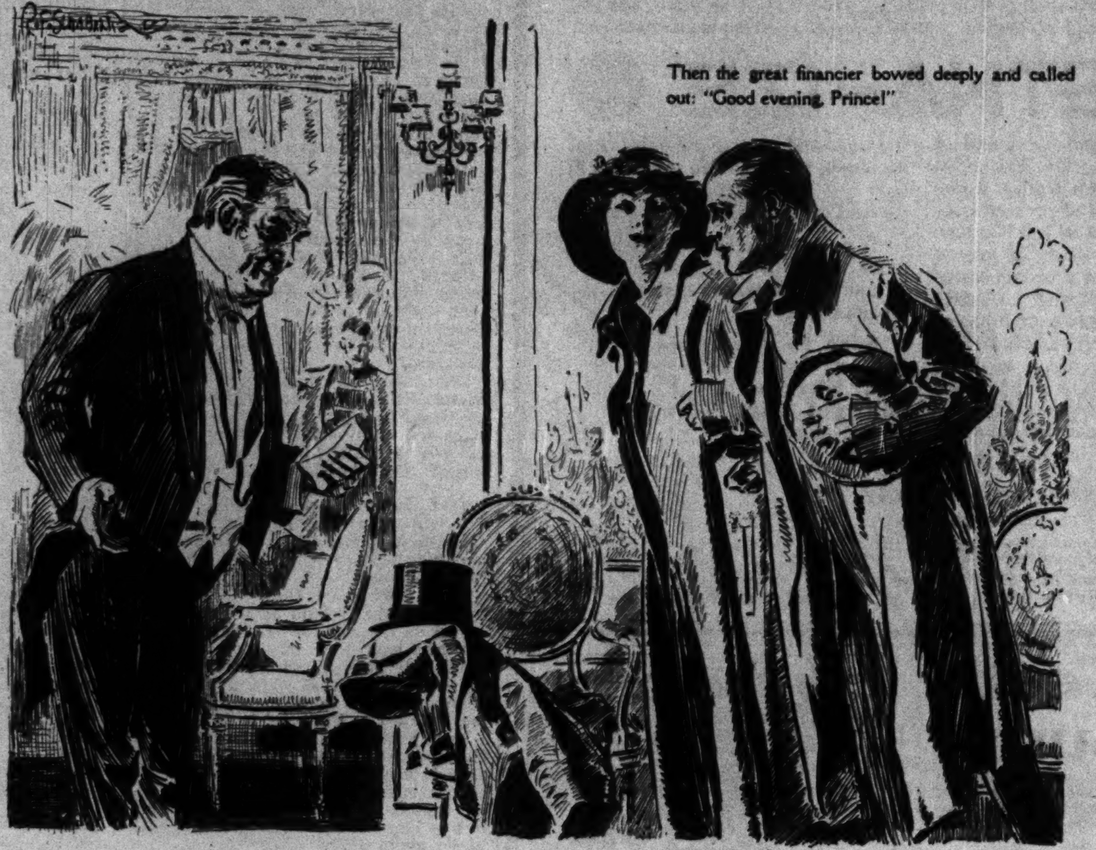
"Please remove that dreadful mackintosh and touch the bell for me. You see, I am a very prosaic person, after all. Even in the face of disaster I can have a craving for food and drink. That's better."

In a sort of daze, he tapped the little table bell. A waiter appeared on the instant.

"Give us more light, waiter," was her command, "and serve dinner at once."

The lights went up, and Robin looked at her soft, smiling eyes.

"It doesn't matter," he whispered hoarsely. "I don't care what happens to me, Bedelia, I — I shall never give you up. You are worth all the kingdoms in the world. You are the loveliest, most adorable ——"



Then the great financier bowed deeply and called out: "Good evening, Prince!"

"HUSH! The eyes of your people are upon you. See! Even the waiter recognizes his prince. He is overcome. Ah! He falters with the consomme. It is a perilous moment. There! I knew something would happen, poor fellow. He has spilled — but, all is well; he has his wits again. See! He replenishes from the steaming tureen. We are saved."

Her mood was so gaily satiric, so inconsequential, that he allowed a wondering, uncertain smile to banish the trouble from his eyes as he leaned back in the chair and studied the vivid, excited face of the girl who had created havoc with his senses. She was dressed as he had seen her on board the Jupiter during those delightful days on deck; the same trim figure in a blue serge suit and a limp white hat, drawn well down over her soft brown hair, with the smart red tie and the never-to-be-forgotten scent of a perfume that would linger in his nostrils forever and forever.

"Do you think it strange that I should have asked you to meet me here in this unconventional way instead of at the Inn?" she inquired, suddenly serious. Again the shy, pleading expression stole into her eyes.

"I did think so, but no longer. I am glad that we are here."

"Mrs. Gaston is inside," she informed him quickly. "I do not come alone. An hour ago the Inn became quite impossible as a trysting place. A small party from the Regengetz arrived for dinner. Can you guess who is giving the dinner? The great and only William W. Blithers, sir, who comes to put an obstinate daughter upon the throne of Graustark, whether she will or no."

"Did he see you?" cried Robin.

"No," she answered, with a mischievous gleam in her eyes. "I stole out through the back door, and sent Marie out with one of the porters to head you off. Then I came on here. I didn't even stop to change my gown."

"Hide and seek is a bully game," said he. "It can't last much longer, Bedelia. I think it is only right that we should go to your father and tell him that — everything is all right. It is his due. You've solved your own problem and are satisfied, so why not reveal yourself. There is nothing to be gained by further secrecy."

She was watching him closely. "Are you, after all is said and done, sure that you want to marry the daughter of William Blithers, in the face of all the bitter consequences that may follow such an act? Think hard, my dear. She is being forced upon you, in a way. Mr. Blithers' money is behind her. Your people are opposed to the bargain, for that is the way in which they will look upon it. They may act very harshly toward you. The name of Blithers is detested in your land. His daughter is reviled. Are you sure that you want to marry her, Re — Robin?"

"Are you through?" he asked, transfixing her with a determined look. "Well, then, I'll answer you. I do want to marry you, and, more than that, I mean to marry you. I love ——"

"You may tell me, Robin, as we are driving back to the Inn together — not here, not now," she said softly, the lovelight in her eyes.

Happiness blurred his vision. He was thrilled by an enchantment so stupefying that the power of speech, almost of thought, was denied him for the time being. He could only sit and stare at her with prophetic love in his eyes, love that bided its time and trembled with anticipation.

Long afterward, as they were preparing to leave Pingari's she said to him:

"My father is at the Inn, Robin. I ran away from him tonight because I wanted to be sure that our adventure was closed before I revealed myself to him. I wanted to be able to say to him that love will find its way, no matter how blind it is, nor how vast the world it has to traverse in search of its own. My father is at the Inn. Take me to him now, Robin, and make the miracle complete."

His fingers caressed her warm cheek as he adjusted the collar of the long seacoat about her throat and chin. Her eyes were starry bright, her red lips were parted.

"My Princess!" he whispered tenderly. "My Princess!"

"My Prince," she said so softly that the words barely reached his ears. "We have proved that Love is the king. He rules us all. He laughs at locksmiths — and fathers — but he does not laugh at sweethearts. Come, I am ready."

He handed her into the cab a moment later, and drew the long deep breath of one who goes down into deep water. Then he followed after her. The attendant closed the door.

"Where to, sir?" called Hobbs from the driver's seat.

He received no answer, yet cracked his whip gaily over the horses' backs and drove out into the slanting rain.

Hobbs was a dependable fellow. He drove the full length of the street twice, passing the Inn of the Stars both times at a lively clip, and might have gone on forever in his shuttlecock enterprise, had not the excited voice of a woman hailed him from the sidewalk.

"Stop! Attendez! You, man!"

He pulled up with a jerk. The dripping figure of Marie ran up from behind.

"My mistress? Where is she?" panted the girl.

"In heaven," said Hobbs promptly, whereupon Marie pounded on the glass window of the cab.

Robin quickly opened the door.

"Wha —— what is it?"

"Yes, Marie," came in muffled tones from the depths of the cab.

"Madame Gaston returns long ago. She is beside herself. She is like a maniac. She has lost you; she cannot explain to — to Mademoiselle's father. Mon Dieu, when he met her unexpectedly in the hall, he shouts, 'where is my daughter?' And poor Madame she has but to shiver and stammer and — run away! Oui! She dash out into the rain! It is terrible. She ——"

Bedelia broke in upon this jumbled recitation. "Where have we been, Robin? Where are we now?"

"Where are we, Hobbs?"

"We are just getting back to the Inn of the Stars, sir, — descending, you might say, sir," said Hobbs.

"Drive on, confound you."

"To the Inn, sir?"

"Certainly!"

The door slammed and the final block was covered in so short a time that Robin's final kiss was still warm on Bedelia's lips when the gallant cab rolled up to the portals of the Inn of the Stars.

"Did you ever know such a night, sir?" inquired Hobbs, as the Prince handed his lady out. He was referring to the weather.

CHAPTER XXIV.

JUST WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN EXPECTED

EVEN the most flamboyant of natures may suffer depression at times, and by the same token arrogance may give way to humility, — or, at the very least, conviction.

Mr. Blithers had had a trying day of it. To begin with, his wife raked him over the coals for what she was pleased to call his senseless persistence in the face of what she regarded as unalterable opposition on the part of the Cabinet and House of Nobles. It appears that he had experienced a second encounter with the Ministry only the day before. After sleeping over the results of his first visit to the Council Chamber, he awoke to the fact that matters were in such a condition that it behooved him to strike while the iron was hot. So he obtained a second hearing, principally because he had not slept as well over it as he would have liked, and secondarily because he wanted to convince himself that he could parade their ancient halls without feeling as self-conscious as a whipped spaniel.

He came off even worse in his second assault upon the ministry, for this time the members openly sneered at his declarations. As for his progress through the enchanted halls he was no end worse off than before. It so happened that he arrived at the Castle at the very hour when the ladies and gentlemen of the royal household were preparing to fare forth to the tennis courts. He came upon them, first on the terrace, then in the entrance, and later on was stared at with evident curiosity by white flanneled and duck-skirted persons in the lofty halls. He wished that he was back at Blitherwood where simplicity was not so infernally common.

He made the mistake of his life when he gave to his wife the details of this second conference with the Cabinet. He did it in the hope that a sympathetic response would be forthcoming. To his surprise, she merely pitied him, but in such a disgustingly personal way that (Continued on page 289)

head in repudiation. "Suppose they all were thieves way back to Adam, that's no excuse why you should be a thief in the sight o' the Lord."

Minden scratched his head, smacked his lips, then grinned broadly. "Say, you've got me—like a piece of toast on a fork; but don't you see that's a bill I've got to settle myself, and don't you see that's a bill that I am settlin' myself! Because of what I done, it ain't for me to have the one thing that's worth living for, the one thing that I've got pride in, the one thing that'd make my old age peaceable if not pious — my little darlin' gal. That's what I pay, Missus, and by gosh!—I beg your pardon, I ain't goin' to swear—that's what I pay an' have got to keep on payin'."

"If you was only a good man," she remarked, her features relaxing now, "if you only had religion, if you'd only found grace and the Spirit had entered into you, why then—"

But now he interrupted with a swift wave of his capacious hand. "No, no, no! What you say now makes me see I care for her ten times as much as you do. D'you think that if I riz' up from the anxious seat to-morrow, an' said 'I've found it, I've found it, I've got religion, I'm saved!'—do you think that'd make any difference? No, no, not any. My gal, my little gal, gosh Almighty!—I beg your pardon twice — no, she ain't never to know that Bill Minden that's done time, that Bill Minden who's plenty notorious, is her father. She's got to think always that Steve and 'Liza Finley was her father and her mother; she's got to have a clean family history. She's too good to be tarred by me. I know my place. I tell you I know my place, an' I'm up against the everlastin' fact that I got to die without her saying to me once, even once, 'Father!' Don't you be so hard. You're good, but don't you be so shy about givin' the glad hand to them that can't never say, 'The Lord is my Shepherd and I shall not want.' I b'long to them that'll have to go on wantin' and not gettin'."

Now there was a faint tremor of the woman's lips. She was suddenly lost in the atmosphere of a bigger world than she had ever known. "If you don't want to take her away, what is it you do want?" she asked helplessly.

HE leaned forward towards her eagerly. "I'd like to be able to come here sometimes, to make friends with you and her—not bosom friends, not like peas in the same social pod, but as a bad man with a good heart that you was bein' kind to. That would be enough for me —just to be near her, to watch her, to see her look this way and that, an' speak this how an' that how, an' doin' the little things that show a woman off. That's why I'm goin' to be school trustee, that's why I'm goin' to be mayor, if I can, just to make me look a bit all right in her eyes. 'Liza Finley, I've talked to you more to-night than I've ever talked for thirty years, an' I've let myself go because I couldn't hold in any longer. Now what are you going to do about it?"

He looked round the room with almost hungry eyes. "I ain't had a home for twenty-two years," he went on. "I've lived inside any old house an' in any old room without reg'lar standin' anywhere; just payin', payin', payin' for anythin' I ever got; payin' for kindness just as I paid for a corn-husk bed, or milk, or old Rye, or a week's washin'. I'd like a home same as this—well, maybe not the same as this every way, for I don't need carpets and antimacassars; but still just a pleasant place same's this, where I'd sit down an' spread out my feet an' look round an' say, 'Now, girls, anything you want to make this home happy is yours.'"

Mrs. Finley rose to her feet in an agitation she could not conceal. "I've got to think it over," she said, "and I can't think right with you sittin' there talking. The way you talk you could almost make the mountains get up and walk; but I got to do my duty. I'm a Christian, I'm a class-leader, I've got religion, and I don't want any traffic in unrighteousness."

"The world wouldn't be saved if the good people didn't look after the bad," remarked Minden shrewdly.

The woman picked at her skirt nervously—it was strange how this man moved her. "Cora'll be back in a minute," she said anxiously. "It's almost her time, and I don't want you here when she comes."

Minden nodded, and rose slowly from the rocking-chair, the antimacassar clinging to his shoulders. Mrs. Finley stepped quickly to him and relieved him of the ludicrous burden. As she did so, Bill caught her hand, and spoke quickly:

"You saw your duty clear when you took my gal from me an' made your bond, which you've kept like a Christian of the caticombs. Well, you'll see your duty again just as I saw it for you twenty-two years ago. You know that dandy hymn, 'For I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies?' Well, you've got a clear title for that sky-gal that once was mine. She's yours forever; she loves you; an' all I want is a little reservation on the prairie-land your title covers. You can dole out the rations—an' don't be stingy, 'Liza Finley."

"I have got to pray over it—that's a fact," she answered. "I've got to take it to the throne of grace."

Bill shrugged his shoulders. "Well, in these days the Throne stoops kindly to democracy an' I'll take my chance," he said as he put on his hat.

It sounded as though he were making light of sacred things, but Mrs. Finley did not misunderstand; it was only "the manner o' speakin'" of the country.

"You must go," she urged. "Cora'll be here any minute now; but I'll let you know, I'll truly let you know what the Lord tells me to do."

Three minutes later, on opposite sides of the street, Bill Minden and his daughter passed each other; but, unlike ships that pass in the night, they did not speak each other in passing. It was too dark for Cora to see who it was, though her father knew, and he listened to her footsteps till he could hear them no longer.

CHAPTER III.

THE CAMP MEETING.

REVIVAL meetings are generally held in great halls or churches; but the strikingly successful revival meeting at Mayo, Nolan Doyle's ranch, was held in tents, and it was therefore called a Camp Meeting. It was the first that had ever been held between Winnipeg and the Rockies. Therefore the population of Askatoon was numerously reinforced by the religious pilgrim from outside, and also by the inquisitive sinner who came to see, be seen, and enjoy whatever sensation the pious exercises might beget. To these was added the visitor and citizen, who was neither religious nor simple, but who had pursued his way without being convicted of unrighteousness on the one hand or being reputed irreligious on the other. His particular conversion, when it came, was no sensation; he was simply convicted of original sin and the atonement and the necessity for finding salvation. His consequent pain, agony, and spiritual disturbance was indispensable to a proper passage from the ranks of the unsaved to the saved. He received the sympathy of those who went about embracing, exhorting and whispering comfort; but his capture caused less rejoicing than when some real outcast, some acknowledged sinner, reprobate, drunkard, evil-liver or scoffer, bent to the spiritual storm and strove with the spirit, until at last, tossing upon the sea of emotion, he felt his fingers grip the bulwark of the ship of salvation. Then, lifted on a wave of passion to its safe deck, he cried out, "I'm saved! Saved! Bless the Lord!" while all around him rose the cry of "Glory! Glory!" with all the emotional ejaculations which signified that a soul was snatched from the burning.

The great revivalist preacher, Ephraim Masterman, was a reaper without a rival so far as the West had known. In the great tent he alternately prayed and exhorted, blessed and wept, soothed and clamoured, and exultingly embraced the conquered ones translated from the anxious seat to the platform of the saved with its spectacular joy.

It was just after the harvest, the weather was still delightfully, indeed amorously warm, and in the lull that followed the strenuous activities of the wheat harvest—or the almost complete harvest—the fervid air of exalted sentiment was highly stimulating. It was perhaps unfortunate that while the tents were pitched in the open there was, very near by, a grove of trees offering invitations to the pleasures of indolence. The cynic might well be scornful of the too neighborly association of the Godly love in the tents in the open and the profane love in the grove that shadowed them.

The Young Doctor scratched his chin in reflection when Terence Brennan, the millionaire railway owner and rancher, fresh from a hasty visit to the Camp Meeting, made out of curiosity while paying a visit to Mrs. Nolan Doyle, his sister, said to him: "Did you ever read Bobby Burns's 'Holy Fair'?" And when the Young Doctor nodded in reply, added cynically, "'And mony a job begun that day will end in hockmagandy, or some ither place.'"

The Young Doctor's reply was a little severe. After all, Terence Brennan was an absentee millionaire who could afford any pleasure he wanted, and therefore could more easily escape the divine discontent possessing those whose field of life is limited, whose pleasures, mental and emotions spiritual, are few.

"It's no bad thing to get back into the primitive life and to the primary emotions," he said. "You are too sophisticated and incredulous, Brennan. 'Evil to him that evil thinks.' You're doing very well out of Askatoon, Brennan. It contributes its share of your railway profits, and you'd better let us work out our own salvation. In fear and trembling, of course, it will be—fear that you'll raise your freight rates on us; but for Heaven's sake let us live our own life. You selfish millionaires are critical because your souls are so small."

Brennan laughed good-naturedly. He loved attack; it was the breath of life to him.

"There, there, I'll give you the chips for the game," he replied. "You can say you've won; but you're right: I'm in a mood to be critical of Askatoon; so I suppose I'm not a really good judge of your holy fair."

"Wherefore critical?" asked the Young Doctor, his mind, as always, alert for every shiver of colours in the kaleidoscope of life.

BRENNAN chuckled and lighted a cigar. "Well, Bill Minden in Askatoon—Bill Minden as school trustee, Bill Minden standing for Mayor, Bill Minden as the fatherly philanthropist, patting the school children on the head, chucking the young lady teacher under the chin, magnetizing the town and corporation with a wave of his bonnie brown hand—well, isn't that enough to make a railway president critical of Askatoon? Once to my knowledge, and twice to my instinct, Bill Minden has gone through the pockets of the passengers of my trains and has scooped the cash from the express-car; and here he is now the pet lamb of the fold!"

"Is that why you are here?" asked the Young Doctor.

"You ought to know better. Isn't my family here—Norah Doyle out at Mayo, and my father and mother! I didn't know that Minden was in Askatoon till I saw him at the camp meeting this afternoon; till I saw him getting inside the big tent with a look on his face like the Queen of Sheba when she met Solomon. It beats me. What's he here for? What's his game?"

"Well, some men, when they're tired of doing the world, seek the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," answered the Young Doctor. "When you're tired of doing the world, Brennan, when you've finished 'watering stock' in the cities, perhaps you'll come, too, and water the onions in your own back garden here: like a king who, having had everything the world can offer, in the spirit of the Sybarite turns hermit, and tries the simple life from the sheer luxury of living."

"Perhaps you're right," answered the millionaire. "The gay Griselda, finding the candle of enjoyment all burnt up, and only the black snuff left, comes and lights the wick again at the altar of the church, and ends her days in peace, properly penitent, pleasantly pious, prudently prepared.

The Young Doctor roared with laughter. "Brennan, you've been listening to Bill Minden. That's his game, and you've caught on. Alliteration is a disease with him. A choicer vocabulary I've never known."

"Suppose the camp meeting catches him—converts him, eh?"

"Well, that would please Mrs. Finley," remarked the Young Doctor with a meaning smile.

"Mrs. Finley? Oh! old Steve Finley's widow, eh? Is she making up to Bill?"

"No, but she seems to have a fancy for saving his soul, and she has offered up petitions in the prayer-meeting pretty constantly of late, that Bill shall be snatched from the burning."

The two men had walked along the street until they had almost reached the door of the post-office. At that moment Cora Finley stepped out of the post-office door, and with eyes alight and excitement in her face, came quickly towards the Young Doctor.

"Oh! what do you suppose has happened!" she said "Mr. Masterman has had a stroke, or something, at the Camp Meeting, and they're bringing him in to Askatoon."

Terence Brennan looked at the girl inquiringly, then said: "I've only just come from there, I didn't hear of it."

"That's easily explained," she answered. "There was no school to-day, the telegraph-operator wanted to go to the Camp Meeting, and I've taken her place at the key. You know I learned telegraphy a long time ago," she added to the Young Doctor. "There's a branch-line to Mayo where the Camp Meeting is, and I've just got the news over the wire. They're bringing him in."

"So endeth the spiritual free-and-easy," remarked Brennan with an ironical smile.

The girl's eyes flashed. "You wouldn't understand," she said; "you're a Roman Catholic."

"No, I suppose I wouldn't understand," the millionaire drawled pleasantly. "It wants a sensitive mind like Bill Minden's to grasp such things."

The girl's eyes flashed indignation. "Some men sin and pay, like Mr. Minden," she said; "and others sin and don't pay."

"Why should they if they don't have to?" pleasantly retorted Brennan.

"Those that sin and are sorry, and suffer and pay now, don't have to pay in the end," she replied severely.

"Well, I'll put it off as long as possible," remarked the capitalist. "'Jordan is a hard road to travel.'"

The Young Doctor's eyes had been searching the girl's face, with a curious, almost set, intentness. Something in her dark blue eyes riveted his attention.

"I see it," he said to himself suddenly and with a thumping of his heart," "By George, I see it!"

A moment afterwards the three had separated, the girl to go back to the post-office, the millionaire to mount his horse and gallop away to the pleasant little home where his old father and mother peacefully lived in the plenty he provided. The Young Doctor went to his office. If Masterman, the revivalist, had had a stroke, they would be sure to send for him, or to bring the sick man to him; and he must be ready for the emergency. As he entered his house he looked back towards the post-office.

"I see it!" he said aloud. "I see it now. She's got Bill Minden's eyes."

ALL night the Young Doctor watched at Masterman's bedside, and by the middle of the following day was able to announce that his patient was out of danger, but that he must take a long rest to recover from the partial paralysis which had seized him. The religious dovecots of Askatoon were greatly fluttered in consequence.

The class-meeting arranged for the morning was as barren of emotional music as a tin pan is of melody. Dejection, irritation, prevailed. Those who were responsible for the organization of the great gathering talked mournfully of the spiritual loss; but there was another loss upon which they were all discreetly silent, until Rigby, the druggist, who was an especially candid soul, remarked that three days more and they would have had enough cash-profit out of the Camp Meeting to pay the debt off the church.

"We expected to net three thousand dollars," he said; "and we've got two thousand five hundred of it; but the chances of getting the last five hundred ain't worth a pinch of bakin' soda."

Here a voice intervened. "Have faith, brother Rigby, have faith!" it cried. "Baking soda makes the dough rise; from faith will rise our deliverer. Perhaps even while we are troubled here, one cometh of whom it may be said, 'Who is this that cometh with dyed garments from Bozrah traveling in the greatness of his strength?'"

Curiosity would bring a crowd to the late afternoon meeting, and interest for one day would be tolerably secure; but it would quickly and finally evaporate unless someone could be found who would raise the standard with a new religious slogan.

The weather was propitious, the late afternoon was very warm, and the comfort of physical warmth is a great encouragement and a great support to an organized meeting. One local minister opened the proceedings very wisely with a hymn, and it was a good hymn. It was the hymn which Bill Minden had quoted to Mrs. Finley, "When I Can Read My Title Clear to Mansions in the Skies." It started well, but it finished on a wave of feeling with a little lower crest than that of previous days. Another minister from the mountains was about to pray, when a shrill and throbbing voice rang out from the crowd singing, "Hold the Fort for I Am Coming," and the congregation, responding to the inspiration, joined in with great fervor, to the delight of the leaders. Prayer by the mountain-preacher followed, but it lacked what one of the critics at the back of the tent called "snap," and he further remarked that it reached the audience it was intended to reach, but he'd take a bet that it didn't reach the Lord.

It was apparent that the emotion of the meeting required flagellation. The leaders soon found themselves in heavy country and were conscious of dying fires. As soon as the hymns had finished, they brought their biggest gun into action. It was the president of a theological college with a clean-shaven actor's face and long white hair combed straight back from a narrow but somewhat lofty forehead. There were times when his unctuous intonations and saponaceous appeals, behind which was a really godly nature, had effect; and just at the start his adjurations and declamation stirred the congregation; but evaporation almost immediately began. Something with more grip, something more rugged and less refined and usual was required. The Rev. Ephraim Masterman had not been rugged, his had not been the voice of the vernacular, but he had been young, eloquent, sentimental, vivid and hypnotic, and having caught the women first by his sad beauty and his ecstasy, he had got the men by a really magnetic force. The white-haired imitator with his stereotyped language and illustrations and adjurations, without a note of originality, was but an imitation of the real thing, of the real emotional power which the stricken revivalist had pushed too far. The congregation was slipping away swiftly out of control, in spite of the speaker's energetic outbursts here and there, of pleadings to sinners, when suddenly, in a short pause of the harangue—indeed in its most desperate moment—a beautiful, clear, full-throated voice rang out above the subdued clamour of those who had found and those who were finding peace. It sang:

"There's a land that is fairer than day
And by faith we can see it afar,
And our Saviour waits over the way
To prepare us a dwelling place there."

IT was the voice of the leader of the choir, Cora Finley. Something in it vibrated like the strings of a violin. It had neither cant, sentimentality or whining. It rang true metal. It was the convinced outpouring of a simple soul that knew no guile, which belonged to all that was, had ever been, or ever had been taught. It was the first note that she had sung at this revival meeting; it was the first time that she had ever taken part as one who had joined the church. The great congregation let her sing the whole verse without joining in, while tears filled Mrs. Finley's eyes and trickled down her cheek; for it seemed to her that the prayers of years had been answered; that her girl "had got religion." The meeting was magnetized once again, and the second verse began in a very storm of exhortation. The preachers had failed and the previous hymns had failed; they had seemed forced and unreal; but now the real thing possessed the meeting.

What was to come after none could tell, but for the moment all was well. To-day was as yesterday; the darkness was lit up. Veins tingled, hearts swelled, tears flowed, voices rang out. In the middle of the third verse, there was a sudden movement which attracted attention and a man's voice calling. Then, all at once, before the congregation could realize what was happening, there sprang on to the platform a man with a great touzled head, bushy beard and blazing blue eyes.

"Saved!" he cried. "Saved! Glory be to God! There's a land that is fairer than day! I'm going—I'm going—I'm going there! Glory be to God!"

It was Bill Minden. The class-leaders on the platform moved down on him, embracing him, shrieking in a frenzy of joy. The congregation rocked to and fro. Bill Minden, the train robber, the jail-bird, the notorious, the school trustee, the philanthropist, the would-be Mayor, Bill Minden was converted. No longer the Bible read upon the hotel stoop, no longer the quaint commentary of the Old Testament to a curious crowd on a Sabbath morning, but now the sinner repentant, crying: "I've found it! I've found it! I've found it!" while shouting came from all sides, "Bless the Lord! Glory be to God, he's saved!"

Two minutes afterwards Minden was pouring out a flood of eloquence which even drowned the memory of Ephraim Masterman. Here was something right out of the core of nature. Here was a man of the people, in the language of the people, talking in a vernacular strain which roused the meeting to wonder and to passion. Now all the past reading of Bill's Old Testament supplied him with texts, phrases, illustrations without number.

he wondered if he could ever forgive her.

"Can't you appreciate what I am doing for Maude?" he argued, almost tearfully.

"I can appreciate what you are doing to her," said she, and swept out of the room.

"It's bad enough to have one stubborn woman in the family," said he to himself, glaring at the closed door—which had been slammed, by the way—"but two of 'em—Good Lord!"

And so it was that Mr. Blithers, feeling in need of cheer, arranged a little dinner for that evening at the Inn of the Stars. He first invited his principal London lawyer and his wife—who happened to be his principal—and then sent a more or less peremptory invitation to the President of the Bank of Graustark, urging him to join the party at the Regengetz and motor to the Inn. He was to bring his wife and any friends that might be stopping with them at the time. The banker declined. His wife had been dead for twenty years; the only friends he possessed were directors in the bank, and they happened to be having a meeting that night. So Mr. Blithers invited his secondary London lawyer, his French lawyer and two attractive young women who it appears were related to the latter, although at quite a distance, and then concluded that it was best to speak to his own wife about the little affair. She said she couldn't even think of going. Maude might arrive that very night and she certainly was not going out of the hotel with such an event as that in prospect.

"But Simpson's wife is coming," protested Mr. Blithers, "and Pericault's cousins. Certainly you must come. Jolly little affair to liven us up a bit. Now Lou——"

"I am quite positive that Lady Simpson will change her mind when she hears that Pericault's cousins are going," said Mrs. Blithers acidly.

"Anything the matter with Pericault's cousins?" he demanded, inclined to the bellicose.

"Ask Pericault," she replied briefly.

He thought for a moment. "If that's the case, Lou, you'll have to come, if only to save my reputation," he said. "I didn't think it of Pericault. He seems less like a Frenchman than any man I've ever known."

MRS. BLITHERS relented. She went to the dinner, and so did Lady Simpson, despite Pericault's cousins, and the only ones in the party who appeared to be uneasy were the cousins themselves. It is safe to say that it was not the rain that put a dampener on what otherwise might have been an excessively jovial party.

Stupendous was the commotion at the Inn of the Stars when it became known that one of the richest men in the world—and a possible father-in-law apparent to the crown—was to honor the place with his presence that night. Everyone, from the manager down to the boy who pared potatoes, laid himself out to make the occasion a memorable one. The millionaire's table was placed in the very center of the dining-room, and plates were laid for eight. At the last minute, Mr. Blithers ordered the number increased to nine.

"My daughter may put in an appearance," he explained to Lady Simpson. "I have left word at the hotel for her to come up if by any chance she happens to arrive on the evening train."

"Haven't you heard from her, Mr. Blithers?" inquired the austere lady, regarding the top of his head with an illy-directed lorgnon.

They were entering the long, low dining-room. Mr. Blithers resented the scrutiny. It was lofty and yet stooping. She seemed to be looking down upon him at right angles, due no doubt to her superior height and to the fact that she had taken his arm.

"We have," said he, "but not definitely. She is likely to pop in on us at any moment, and then again she's likely not to. My daughter is a very uncertain person, Lady Simpson. I never seem to be able to put my finger upon her."

"Have you ever tried putting the whole hand upon her?" inquired her ladyship, and Mr. Blithers stared straight ahead, incapable of replying.

He waited until they were seated at the table and then remarked: "I am sorry you got splashed, Lady Simpson. You'd think they might keep the approach to a place like this free of mud and water."

"Oh, I daresay the gown can be cleaned, Mr. Blithers," she said. "I am quite ready to discard it, in any event, so it really doesn't matter."

"My dear," said Mr. Blithers to his wife, raising his voice so that diners at nearby tables could not help hearing what he said, "I forgot to tell you that we are expected to dine with the Prince at the Castle." Then he wondered if any one in the room understood English.

"When?" she inquired.

"Very shortly," said he, and she was puzzled for a moment by the stony glare he gave her.

Lord Simpson took this opportunity to mention that he had taken reservations for the return of himself and wife to Vienna on the next day but one.

"We will catch the Orient Express on Friday and be in London by Monday," he said. "Our work here is completed. Everything is in ship shape. Jenkins will remain, of course, to attend to the minor details, such as going over the securities and——"

"Don't you like that caviar?" asked Mr. Blithers with some asperity.

"It has a peculiar taste," said Lord Simpson.

"Best I've ever tasted," said Mr. Blithers, spreading a bun thickly. Pericault's cousins were fingering the champagne glasses. "We've got sherry coming first," said he.

"Absolutely," said Mr. Blithers with precision. "You needn't hurry things. We've got the whole evening ahead of us."

Lady Simpson shivered slightly. The Pericault cousins brightened up. There was still a chance that the "dowagers" would retire early from the scene of festivity.

"By the way," said Simpson, "how long do you purpose remaining in Edelweiss, Blithers?"

For the first time, the capitalist faltered. He was almost ready to admit that his enterprise had failed in one vital respect. The morning's experience in the Council Chamber had shaken his confidence considerably.

"I don't know, Simpson," said he. "It is possible that we may leave soon."

"Before the Prince's dinner?" inquired Lady Simpson, again regarding his bald spot through the lorgnon.

"Depends on what my daughter has to say when she gets here," said he almost gruffly. "If she wants to stay for a while, we will remain. I don't mind saying that I have a curious longing for Wall street. I am at home there and—well, by George, I'm like a fish out of water here."

His wife looked up quickly, but did not speak.

"I am a business man, Lady Simpson, not a philanderer. I'd like to take this town by the neck and shake some real enterprise into it, but what can you do when everybody is willing to sit down and let tradition look after 'em! I've put a lot of money into Grosstock and I'd like to see the country prosper. Still I'm not worried over my investment. It's as good as gold."

"Perfectly safe," said Lord Simpson.

"Absolutely," said the secondary London lawyer.

PERICAULT'S comment was in French and not intended to be brief, but as Mr. Blithers was no longer interested, the privilege of completing his remarks was not accorded him. He did say Mon Dieu under his breath, however, in the middle of his employer's next sentence.

"As I said before, everything depends on whether my daughter wants to remain. If she says she wants to stay, that settles the point so far as I am concerned. If she says she doesn't want to stay, we'll—well, that will settle it also. I say, waiter, can't you hurry the fish along!"

"Certainly, sir. I understood M'sieur to say that there was no hurry——"

"Well, pour the champagne anyway. I think we need it."

Two hours later Mr. Blithers looked at his watch again. The party was quite gay: at least fifty per cent disorderly.

"That train has been in for an hour," said the host. "I guess Maude didn't come. I left word for the hotel to call me up if she arrived—I say, waiter, has there been a telephone message for me?"

"No, M'sieur. We have kept a boy near the telephone all evening, M'sieur. No message."

"I also told 'em to send up any telegram that might come," he informed his wife, who merely lifted her eyebrows. They had been lowered perceptibly in consequence of the ebulience of Pericault's cousins. The vivacious young

A Real Love Story with bigger plot and more action, deeper mystery and greater love, sweeter sentiment and stronger passions than any novel the author has yet written.

Philadelphia North American—In the novelist's "Their Yesterdays," the immediate predecessor of the present work, the mere duty and joy of living and loving was the underlying motive and theme. But in "The Eyes of the World," in addition to an intricate and finely wrought love story, the narrative conveys not only heart history, but sturdy censure of baser ideals in literature and art.

The Eyes of the World
Harold Bell Wright

Harold Bell Wright has told this delightful romance so convincingly and has so clearly defined the underlying purpose of the story that it is stamped with the truthfulness of a chapter out of real life.

Kansas City Star—"The Eyes of the World" is powerfully written. It deserves a high place, whether you take it for its literary value or its moral lesson. Beyond a doubt the author has written a book that will rank with "The Shepherd of the Hills" and "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

women were attracting a great deal of attention to their table. Smart diners in the immediate neighborhood appeared to be a trifle shocked. Three dignified looking gentlemen, seated near the door, got up and left the room.

"We really must be going," said Mrs. Blithers nervously, who had been watching the three men for some time with something akin to dismay in her soul. She had the sickening notion that they were members of the Cabinet—lords of the realm.

"All right," said Mr. Blithers. "Call the cars up, waiter. Still raining?"

"Yes, M'sieur. At this season of the year——"

"Call the cars. Let's have your bill."

Pericault's cousins were reluctant to go. In fact, they protested shrilly that it was silly to break up such a successful party at such an unseemly hour.

"Never mind," whispered Pericault softly, and winked.

"I'll leave 'em in your care, Pericault," said Mr. Blithers grimly. "They are your cousins, you know."

"Trust me implicitly, Monsieur," said Pericault, bowing very deeply. Then he said good-night to Mrs. Blithers and Lady Simpson. The secondary London lawyer did the same.

Out in the wide, brilliantly lighted foyer, a few late-stayers were waiting for their conveyances to be announced. As the four departing members of the Blithers party grouped themselves near the big doors, impatient to be off, a brass-buttoned boy came up and delivered a telegram to the host. He was on the point of tearing open the envelope when his eyes fell upon two people who had just entered the hall from without, a man and woman clad in raincoats. At the same instant the former saw Mr. Blithers. Clutching his companion's arm he directed her attention to the millionaire.

"Now for it, Bedelia," he whispered excitedly.

Bedelia gazed calmly at Mr. Blithers and Mr. Blithers gazed blankly at the Prince of Graustark. Then the great financier bowed very deeply and called out:

"Good evening, Prince!"

He received no response to his polite greeting, for the Prince was staring at Bedelia as if stupefied. The millionaire's face was very red with mortification as he turned it away.

"He—he doesn't recognize you," gasped Robin in amazement.

"Who?" she asked, her eyes searching the room with an eager, inquiring look.

"Your father," he said.

She gave him a ravishing delighted smile.

"Oh, it is so wonderful, Robin. I have fooled you completely. That man isn't my father."

"That's Mr. Blithers or I am as blind as a bat," he exclaimed.

"Is it, indeed? The one reading the telegram, with his eyes sticking out of his head?"

Robin's head was swimming. "Good Heavens, Bedelia, what are you——"

"Ah!" she cried, with a little shriek of joy. "See! There he is!"

One of the three distinguished men who had been remarked by Mrs. Blithers now separated himself from his companions and approached the couple. He was a tall, handsome man of fifty. Although his approach was swift and eager, there was in his face the signs of wrath that still struggled against joy.

She turned quickly, laid her hand upon the Prince's rigid arm, and said softly: "My father is the Prince of Dawsbergen, dearest."

A CRUMPLED telegram dropped from Mr. Blithers' palsied hand to the floor as he turned a white, despairing face upon his wife. The brass-buttoned boy picked it up and handed it to Mrs. Blithers. It was from Maude.

"Channie and I were married in Vienna today. After all, I think I shall not care to see Graustark. Channie is a dear. I have promised him that you will take him into the business as a partner. We are at the Bristol.—Maude."

THE END.

Country Town Sayings

By Ed. Howe

NO ONE seems to be very liberal. Don't you know a stingy story on nearly all your acquaintances?

If you got into unnecessary trouble, people would say, "It's too bad." But that's about all they'd do for you.

I have no use for the idle man who goes about telling how liberal he would be if he had an industrious man's money.

I have wronged myself oftener than others have wronged me.

Unless a man amounts to a good deal, he should not say he has done his best.

If you are not under discipline or restraint, you are not amounting to much.

Most people who pass a fresh paint sign touch the paint to see if it is still fresh—and leave a mark.

A man has a right to be a fool about two or three things; but if he is a fool about everything, the people have a right to criticise him.

Always remember that a good deal may be said on the other side.

A woman's scream is as effective protection to her as a man's ability to fight is protection to him.

You can get a very good thousand dollar piano for three hundred dollars.

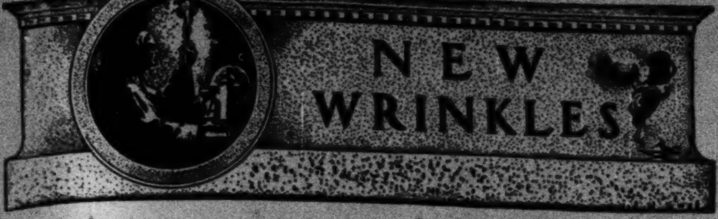
There are always people to say that the best singer in the world can't sing.

A good, steady man can starve a "good mixer" to death in two or three years.

When a man talks, he is usually representing his prejudices or his individual troubles; very few people condemn a thing because it is wrong or praise it because it is right.

Leaders are nearly all greedy, and a selfish man is better than selfish men are said to be. A really selfish man will not tell a falsehood, or do a dishonest act, for the reason that dishonest and untruthful men are always punished. And a selfish man desires to avoid punishment. A selfish man, because of industry and care, will do something for the community in which he lives; it is the selfish men who afford employment for others. The selfish man may not wish to pay very liberal wages, but the labor unions will attend to that. I am tired of the liberal, great-hearted, unselfish men who do not accomplish anything. The world's weakness is not that we have so many selfish, successful men; the real menace is that so many are poor, and so many institutions weak and unprofitable.

In the small towns, and in the country, there are thousands of great men who are never heard of fifty miles from home. Drive through a farming community, and, when a big house is pointed out to you, the owner of which successfully farms several hundred acres of land, you have found another unknown great man. And you can ride from one end of the country to the other, and never long be out of sight of the homes of unknown great men of this description. There are a dozen, or a hundred, successful, useful, worthy men to every man who is really poor. Every good mechanic, on his way to become foreman, superintendent or employer, is a successful man. We are a nation of rich men; that is the reason our country has such a prominent place in the sun.



This department is a General Exchange of Ideas for our readers. Nearly everyone has worked out or happened upon a better way of doing something than the usual way—some new wrinkle. If you know any new wrinkle, give others the advantage of it, and at the same time benefit yourself. One dollar will be paid for each new wrinkle accepted. Unused manuscripts will be destroyed unless postage is enclosed for return. Address NEW WRINKLE BUREAU, Room 1262 Fifth Avenue Building, New York, N. Y.

When moths are found in furs the following plan should be resorted to: Take the piece into the open air on a sunny day, and shake thoroughly. Slap quickly on the reverse side, to dislodge every particle of dust, then, with a clean, coarse-toothed comb, comb the fur thoroughly, but not over-vigorously. If moths are there the chances are that some loose fur, that has been eaten off, will come out. Then sponge the fur well with gasoline, wetting the fur, but not the hide. While it is still wet, wrap it closely in newspapers and put away in an air-tight box and keep so for several days. This treatment ordinarily kills both moths and the eggs.—S. C. C., Providence, R. I.

An effective solution for renovating and brightening linoleum is made as follows: Mix six ounces of "yellow wax," which is a common drug supply, with eleven ounces of spirits of turpentine. Then add five or six ounces of some good varnish. The vessel in which the solution is mixed should be placed in a pan of hot water as the heat is needed to effect a complete mixture. To apply, first wash the linoleum and dry, then paint over with the solution and allow it to dry. A brilliant luster results.—L. T. W., Des Moines, Ia.

If a lemon squeezer is used to extract onion juice there will be no injury to the eyes. Slice off the root end of the onion and proceed as with half a lemon, using a glass or aluminum lemon juice extractor ordinarily sold at five and ten-cent stores.—J. A. D., So. Omaha, Neb.

For a bare spot on the lawn where neither grass nor flowers will grow, sow flaxseed. Before scattering the seed the spot should be well spaded, and then kept well watered for a few weeks after. In a short time there will be a pretty bed of flourishing little green plants, all feathery and dotted with blossoms, small and pale blue, that will last from July to September.—M. F. H., Fall River, Mass.

Guides in the woods, when walking uphill or over rising ground, find it a relief to the muscles to straighten the leg, instead of keeping it bent, between steps.

The housewife with many stairs to climb will find this an excellent practice, as the momentary removal of strain makes stair-climbing very much less laborious.—T. J., Bronxville, N. Y.

Small seeds sown out of doors will sprout sooner if a coarse gunny sack is spread over the seed bed, and dampened occasionally in very dry weather. It is wisest not to remove the sack until the plants are well above ground.—M. F. H., Fall River, Mass.

Suede shoe polish is excellent for restoring suede gloves. The gloves should be placed on the hands and gone over lightly with a sponge that is squeezed almost dry. After a few minutes they should be worn again in order to keep the gloves from shrinking. If the gloves should have a varnished appearance it will disappear after they are once worn.—H. S., N. Y. City.

Beautiful Hair and lots of it—if you use Crystolis

Here's good news at last for men and women whose hair is falling, who are growing bald and gray, whose scalps are covered with dandruff that nothing seems to keep away and whose heads itch like mad.

Good news even for those who imagine themselves hopelessly and incurably bald or who suffer from hair or scalp trouble of any kind.

We have secured the sole American rights for the great English discovery, Crystolis, the new hair remedy that in Europe has been called the most wonderful discovery of the century, having been awarded Gold Medals at the big Paris and Brussels Expositions.

Already, since securing the American rights hundreds of men and women have written us to tell of phenomenal results obtained by its use. People who have been bald for years tell how they now glory in their beautiful hair. Others who have had dandruff all their lives say they have now a clean, healthy scalp and that hair stopped falling after a few applications of this wonderful new treatment.

We give you a binding guarantee without any "strings" or red tape, that it won't cost you a cent if we do not prove to you that "Crystolis" will do all we claim for it, and what's important, we have plenty of money to back our guarantee. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. Ingersoll
Dollar Watch
INGERSOLL YANKEE

Once the Christmas of Kings—
Today the Christmas of Millions

TIME was when a watch was the royal gift, crested with jewels and requiring a lifetime of careful labor to complete a single mechanism.

What of all her rich possessions did Queen Bess handle and consult so often as the watch which had been Lord Leicester's Christmas offering?

What today does the prince or princess of the American home make so constant a companion and so trusted a guide as a watch?

What of all things embodies so well the Christmas spirit, happily blending hourly use and beauty and sentiment and mystery?

The old masterpiece valued at so many thousands that all but royalty were excluded from possession, was not worth as much as a time-keeper as the Ingersoll Dollar Watch of today.

A watch is still the royal gift, yet the giving of a watch, because of its great cost, once so rare a privilege, is yours today for little more than the cost of a pocket handkerchief.

So millions of homes on Christmas morning will be happier because of a great American invention which has come to full perfection in the newest models of the Ingersoll Watch.

No boy or girl, no man or woman can fail to find some welcome use for one of the four Ingersoll models.
